Workers Won't See Gov't Wage Offer

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Canadian Union of Postal Workers president Joe Davidson said today 22,000 striking inside employees would not get to see the government's latest wage offer because it just wasn't enough.

"The executive board decided unanimously that the government offer was so far from the members' contractual demands it just wasn't worth presenting," said Davidson.

As the executive dug in its heels against the government's latest offer, pockets of dissident members broke ranks and reported for work at the invitation of the post office.

In Ottawa, 15 postal workers were back on the job sorting some 90,000 pieces of mail that were in the office when the strike was called. By this afternoon, 33 mail handlers were on the job, a post office spokesman said.

Officials reported about 40 post offices reopened in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, along with a scattered handful of bureaus in contral British Columbia and the Maritimes.

Members of the 5,000-strong Toronto local were to vote on a return to work Saturday. The Toronto post office is the largest and handles about 50 per cent of the country's mail daily.

"That's definitely the "biscuit," said a source in the postmaster general's office. "If Toronto votes to go back you can figure the strike's been broken."

Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey insisted Thursday that talks to end the 18-day mail strike be discontinued so the CUPW leadership could show the money package to its members and let them decide what to do with it.

Mackasey said the offer of $1.70 an hour over 30 months was a fair agreement and the best he could do.

The offer was recommended six weeks ago by a three-man conciliation board headed by Quebec Justice Jean Moisin, the unanimous choice of both sides to head the panel.

The same increase was accepted by 82 per cent of Canada's 18,000 letter carriers last April.

The union has demanded a 51 per cent increase of $2.73 an hour on a two year contract and wants the men paid for their lunch hour each day. CUPW members now earn $4.59 an hour.

Prime Minister Trudeau told the Commons today government will not legislate an end to the strike at this stage.

Trudeau, pressed by Progressive Conservative MPs, said the government's present attitude does not preclude intervention to end the strike at a later date.

Jim Harris, public relations officer for the Halifax Post Office, also said the post office will accept any striking CUPW members who decide to return to work.

He listed details of the offer as follows:

—The contract would be for 30 months, retroactive to Jan. 1 and ending June 30, 1977.

—The total wage increase would be $1.70 an hour. It would begin with a 70-cent increase retroactive to Jan. 1, followed by 30 cents retroactive to July 1; 40 cents next Jan. 1; and 30 cents next July 1.

—Weekend premiums for each regularly-scheduled hour worked would be increased to 75 cents on Sundays and 60 cents on Saturdays. Shift premiums for evening and night shifts would be increased to

Economic Damage Warned

By PETER THOMSON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Bank of Canada Governor Gerald Bouey Thursday issued a new warning that Canada is in serious economic trouble.

Testifying before the Commons Finance Committee Bouey declared; "It has now become absolutely essential to bring inflation under control in this country if we are to avoid major economic and social damage."

Controlling inflation offers the only realistic hope of achieving a sound economic recovery, he added.

Bouey told the committee that no one should have any doubt what is involved in bringing inflation under control. "We will find ourselves better off, not worse off as many seem to think."

Canada's costs and prices have continued to spiral upwards very rapidly despite more than a year of recession and a more prolonged and severe recession in the outside world.

Two years ago what was happening to prices in Canada was part of a worldwide phenomenon.

"More recently, however, the trend of costs and prices in a number of the main countries with which we trade has clearly begun to moderate," Bouey warned. "To an increasing extent continuing rapid inflation in Canada is now a special problem of our own."

OTTAWA (CP) — After a one-month respite, the cost of living rose sharply in October, mainly because of higher prices for shelter and food, Statistics Canada reported today.

The consumer price index in October was at 142.8. Stated another way, this means a basket of consumer items that could be brought for $100 in 1971 cost $142.80 last month. The same basket cost $141.50 in September and $129.10 a year ago.

The purchasing power of a 1971 dollar had dropped to 70 cents by September.

The sharp October rise of nine-tenths of one per cent is a return to the situation which existed during the summer months. Between June and August, the consumer price index jumped almost four per cent. The September increase moderated to two-tenths of one per cent, mainly because food prices were lower.

In October, all the major components of the index, including food, moved higher.

There are still some affects from government-approved increases in energy costs to be reflected in the index.

Freezes in gasoline prices for Ontario and Manitoba residents end Nov. 15. These were imposed to protect consumers against a $1.50-a-barrel rise in domestic crude oil prices approved earlier this year. Ontario residents will pay 5.4 cents a gallon more for gasoline when the price freeze is lifted.

Higher domestic crude prices, plus the 10-cents-a-gallon federal excise tax on gasoline, will eventually add between one and one-half and two percentage points to the consumer price index, Statistics Canada estimates.

About half the October living costs rise occurred because shelter costs were higher. An average 13-percent rise in annual residential property taxes was the main reason.

But in addition, food prices started to move up again after some declines in September. Beef and pork prices were higher as were prices for fresh vegetables, coffee, canned salmon and restaurant meals.

There were some seasonal bargains for fresh fruit to offset these rises, as well as lower sugar prices. But overall, food costs were 12 per cent higher last month than a year ago.

Besides food and shelter, local transit fares jumped to 50 cents a ticket from 35 cents in Montreal, many municipalities raised water rates and professional fees for dental care were raised. Several provinces increased prices for alcholic beverages.

In Paris the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development reported today that Canada and Austria had the smallest increases in consumer prices in the major non-Communist countries in September.

Bourassa Eyes Site Takeover

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec government is considering taking over construction of facilities for the 1976 Olympic Games, according to La Presse.

In a front-page story from Quebec City, the newspaper says Premier Robert Bourassa will decide on government action within five days following meetings with officials of the City of Montreal and the Games organizing committee.

The premier is scheduled to meet Mayor Jean Drapeau and Gerard Niding, chairman of the city's executive committee, during the weekend, the newspaper quotes government sources as saying.

Government spokesmen were reported as saying Quebec may announce the takeover of Games construction when the City of Montreal asks for an additional $200-million loan to help finance Olympic projects. The request is expected soon.

Opposition critics say a further loan would bring the city's total financial involvement with the Games to $812 million.

Cancer Toll Rising

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — People died of cancer at a higher rate in the first seven months of 1975 than at any time since the U.S. government began gathering such statistics 42 years ago, monthly data gathered by the National Centre for Health Statistics show.

The National Cancer Institute said Thursday it could not explain the 5.22 per cent increase this year despite the fact that more people are surviving the illness.

In 1933 — the first year for which comprehensive data are available — 105.9 persons per 100,000 died of cancer. By the end of 1974 the figure was 169.5. As of last July 31, it was 176.3.

The cancer death rate has gone up about 1 per cent annually since 1933.

In 1952, for unexplained reasons, there were 1.9 per cent more deaths than in the previous year, but in the next 20 years deaths kept increasing at the 1 per cent rate.

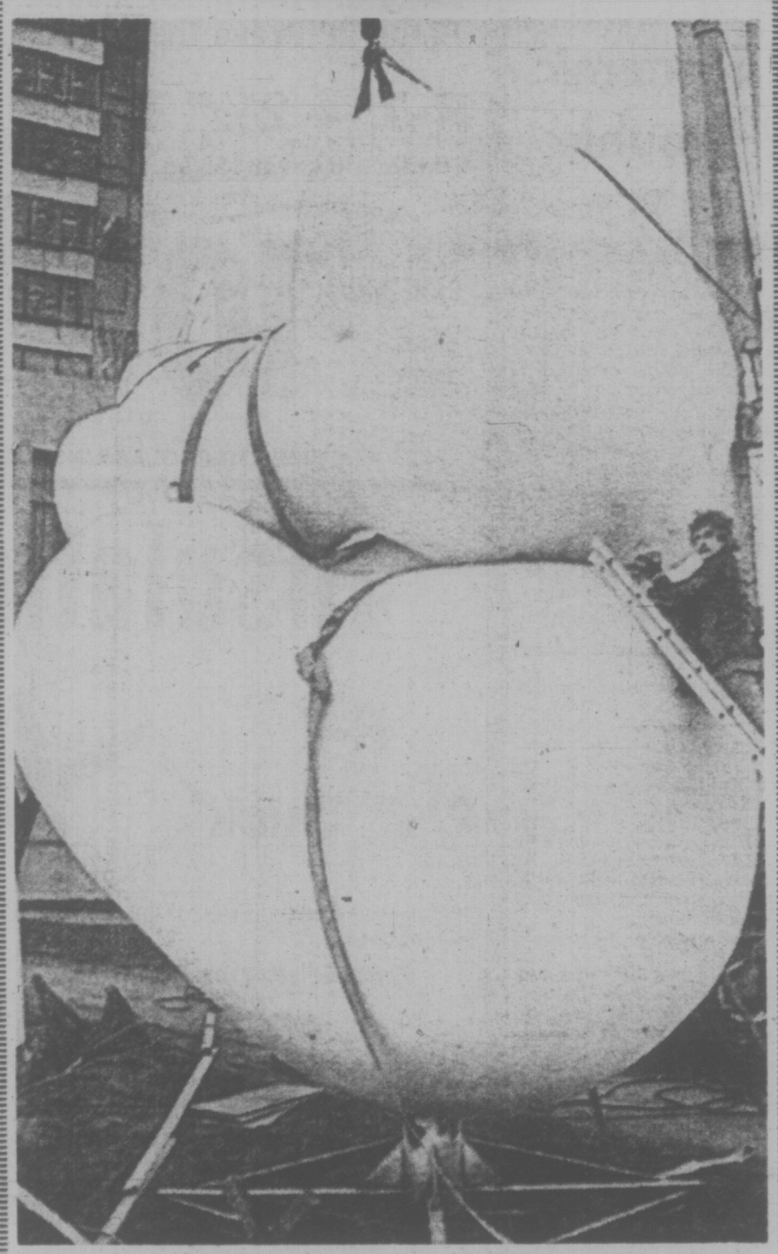
LONDON (AP) — John Cardinal Heenan, 70, Archbishop of Westminster and ranking prelate in the English Roman Catholic hierarchy, died today after a long illness.

THIS IS LOVE?



Montreal sculptor Henry Jones spent today glueing together the pieces of his sculpture known as Love in front of the Place du Portage in Hull. Two weeks ago, Jones refused to put the pieces together until the Public Works Department, which has already paid out more than $70,000 for the art work, gave him more money. He backed down after the government threatened to enforce terms of a contract signed in the middle of 1974 which, it said, made assembling the statue Jones' responsibility.

Thumbs-Up From Labor For Barrett

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Premier Barrett hustled into the lions' den of organized labor today and got a thumbs-up sign from labor leaders.

The only union showing a unified opposition to Barrett and the NDP was the Canadian Paperworkers Union, one of the unions legislated back to work.

CPU leader Art Gruntman led his 30 delegates off the convention floor as Barrett arrived, saying "it would be hypocritical to forgive and forget."

In the first major speech of his election campaign — an emotional and at times a melodramatic one — to 700 delegates at the B.C. Federation of Labor convention, Barrett said he had wanted labor earlier that the "Honeymoon" wouldn't last.

But that was almost his only reference to his government's amendments to the Labor Code and to Bill 146, the back-to-work legislation.

The delegates have debated the NDP's labor policies for the past week, calling Bill 146 labor's nemesis, but the reception given the premier today leaves no doubt he will have the same support from organized labor he received last time around.

Only about half the delegates in the crowded convention hall rose to their feet when the premier made his appearance, but as he left the place exploded with applause.

Naturally, the biggest target of his speech was the Social Credit opposition — "The same old gang wanting the same old spoils."

The premier said when the agricultural land reserve bill was brought in the opposition cried that "little old fat Dave was at it again."

"They said we were going to pack up all the land in a little box and ship it off to Hitler's Germany or to Stalinist Russia, but two years later everyone . . . knows we have the best land control bill in North America."

But if the Social Credit regained power the land bill would be scrapped, said Barrett, "as the speculators will be allowed to have their crop again."

Barrett's biggest laugh from his speech came during his description of the NDP's venture into the business world.

"I finally figured all this out. When you help the companies it's called grants, and when you help people it's called welfare.

"I can tell you that we're changing it around in B.C. From now on when he help companies it will be welfare and when we help people it will be called a grant."

$1M Ransom Girls Found Buried Alive

BURNABY — Two teen-age girls spent five days buried in a bunker the size of a grave before being discovered by RCMP following a massive five-day secret investigation.

A 22-year-old Malaysian student has been charged with kidnapping them and demanding a $1 million ransom.

Monica Gunawan and Mrs. Shianita Layarda, both 19-year-old students, were discovered in a dugout six feet by two feet and three feet deep under the concrete floor of a garage at the rear of a house on Ferndale in East Vancouver.

You Sooi Tan appeared in Burnaby provincial court this morning charged with kidnapping.

Finding the two women alive and the arrest brought to an end a massive five-day investigation involving about 100 RCMP members from the Lower Mainland and B.C. Tel staff working in strict secrecy.

'We thought publicity would jeopardize the girls' lives," said Insp. Cy Thomas head of Burnaby RCMP.

When police broke through the concrete garage floor, the girls lay there weak and terrified, a police spokesman said.

"We had some difficulty making them believe we were their saviors and that we hadn't come to kill them," said Sergeant Bill Howitt. "The first thing they saw was a group of big men armed with shotguns."

The women were last heard from at Miss Gunawan's home in Burnaby on Saturday.

Police said that on Sunday, Miss Gunawan's brother, Suhaeri, received a telephone call saying the girls had been kidnapped and would be released when a $1 million ransom was paid.

Police said that Miss Gunawan's father owns a steel and engineering firm and a motorcycle assembly plant in Jakarta, and Miss Layarda's fa-

EDMONTON (CP) — Mayor William Hawrelak, one of Alberta's most controversial civic officials, died early today in University Hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack. Dr. John Reid, the hospital's medical director, said Hawrelak, 59, died at 7:20 a.m.

Mobile Home Controls Urged

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Mobile homes or "manufactured housing" will soon account for over half the new hosing in B.C. and thus should be treated like conventional homes, according to a government report released today.

The 179-page report presented by special consultant Michael Audain shows 44,000 B.C. households living in mobile homes today and predicts more and more people will move to the cheaper form of housing.

"Within 10 years stick-built detached homes will only be built for people able to afford unique architectural designs," said the report, commissioned by Premier Barrett last May.

In public hearings attended by 1,700 people around the province Audain said he found the construction quality of mobile homes needs to be improved and residents generally feel victimized by entrance and exit fees levied by park operators.

He made 45 recommendations for bringing mobile home builders, salesmen and park operators under government regulation through the department of housing and the Rentalsman's office.

They include:

—Tightening up inspection standards at mobile home plants;

—Much stricter fire safety regulations including provision of secondary escape routes from bedrooms, fire-resistant furnace containers and fire detection alarm systems required by July 1, 1976;

—Restricting the sale of all second-hand homes to licensed real estate agents.

The report said park owners should not be allowed to solicit money as a condition of renting a space and any tenant who has already paid an entrance fee should have it returned by deducting it from monthly rental charges.

Park owners should also not be allowed to restrict the sale of units in their park or be able to take a percentage of the sale value.

No park owner should be able to restrict his park to units sold by any one mobile home dealer and the report recommends the Rentalsman have jurisdiction over disputes between tenant and park owners on park regulations.

The government's new Savings and Trust Corporation should provide loans to park developers in northern and other remote areas of the province and should set up mortgage programs for purchasers.

INQUIRY ORDERED INTO 32-DEATH CRASH

OTTAWA (CP) — A public inquiry will be held into the 32-death crash of a Panarctic Oils Ltd. aircraft at Rea Point, N.W.T., a year ago, Justice Minister Ron Basford said today.

The minister said in the Commons that he will soon announce terms of reference for the inquiry and a commissioner.

Basford said he was making the order for the inquiry after considering recommendations by a coroner's inquest into the deaths of 32 of the 34 crew and passengers aboard the ill-fated flight.

He had also considered the importance of air safety in the North.

A transport department investigation concluded that pilot error was largely responsible for the crash but the pilot's wife and sister have disputed some of the findings of the investigators. The pilot was Brian Thomson of Leduc, Alta.

Kidnapped Girls Rescued

Police said that a man arrived at Miss Gunawan's home on Saturday, told them he was a policeman, then drove them to the garage. They said the man told the women that the small concrete lid covering the bunker was wired with explosives which would be detonated if they tried to escape.

Police said the women were supplied with food during their ordeal.

They said the man told the women he was part of a San Francisco organization that would kill the women if the ransom was not paid, however, police said they have discounted this statement.

The garage where the two girls were held was located in the back yard of a three-bedroom home rented by seven Malaysian students, including Tan.

One of the residents, 20-year-old Charles Wong of Sibu, Malaysia told reporters "we had no idea the girls were in the garage." He said the seven students moved into the rented home about six weeks ago.

Wong said Tan "couldn't find a room anywhere else, so he came with us. He seldom talked about himself and we did not know much about him."

Wong said he called police last Saturday when he suspected someone had been around a garage where the girls were found Thursday.

40 cents an hour. All shift and weekend premiums would be applied equally to part time and fulltime workers.

—Vacations would be set at three weeks for employees with up to 14 years of service; four weeks after 14 years; and five weeks after 27 years. Vacation pay for part-time employees would be set at four per cent of earnings for up to 14 years, six per cent after 27 years.

—Overtime would be at time-and-a-half for regular days. Overtime hours worked on days of rest or an holidays would be paid at double time, in addition to regular holiday pay.

Striking inside postal workers in Halifax were permanently enjoined today from interfering with the operations of Emergency Courier Service but told they could have up to three of their members on hand near the service to disseminate information.

Mr. Justice J. L. Dubinsky of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court secured an agreement on the number of strikers who could be present from lawyers for CUPW and the courier service which was set up by jobless letter carriers last week.

All sides steered sharply away from identifying the three as pickets, after agreeing that picketing against somebody with whom one has no employer-employee relationship is illegal under Canadian law.

Economic Trouble

Making a strong argument in favor of the government's wage and price restraint program, Bouey added that Canada can no longer count on being able to reduce unemployment simply by taking sufficiently strong measures to raise internal demand for goods and services.

"There is a very real risk that further stimulation of demand . . . would serve mainly to fuel still higher inflation.

"As a result, unemployment would remain high; conceivably it could go still higher," Bouey warned the committee.

He added that there is no way of bringing inflation under control quickly except at a very heavy cost in lost job opportunities and foregone output.

To rely on money supply and budget policies alone to slow down the rate of inflation might take a very long time to succeed in view of the present high rates of increase in prices and money incomes.

However, Bouey said, he did believe monetary and fiscal restraint could work if it is supplemented by an effective program of price and income restraints.

The governor of the central bank noted that inflation had sprung from expansionary monetary and fiscal policies of the early 1970s in almost all of the world's industrial countries, including Canada.

Victoria: Jobless Peaking

High levels of unemployment in southern Vancouver Island appear to have peaked and indications are for a rising number of jobs, Canada Manpower manager Stan Purdy said today.

The opinion is based on findings of agency's economist and current trends of regional employment.

Available jobs in Greater Victoria are expected to grow at a rate of three per cent during the next 12 months, Purdy said in his report for October.

Job activity has been high despite the high provincial and national levels of unemployment, exceeding expectations of those businesses and industries contributing to the report, Purdy said.

Construction demands are high and laid-off workers are being recalled to forest and manufacturing jobs as preholiday retailing prospects appear bright.

Purdy said the market would absorb those who are at present unemployed, but at the same time he indicated the possibility of slackening in the construction trades because of the absence of tendering for major projects that will show up in the new year.

the weather

The front that produced stormy conditions on the west coast Thursday has now moved off to Alberta. In its wake cool unstable air covers all of British Columbia. Most interior locations will experience some snowflurry activity today. Rainshowers will be general along the coast although the sun will probably manage to peek through the clouds occasionally. With the cool conditions the showers will fall in the form of snow at elevations above 3,000 feet. Isolated thundershowers are also likely at a few localities on the south coast today.

Liberals Block Probe Into Sky Shops Deal

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Another Commons move for a judicial inquiry into the 1972 Sky Shops deal was made Thursday by Tory Tom Cossitt who wanted to know what happened to the $95,000 profit Liberal Senator Louis Giguere made on a $5,000 investment in Sky Shops stock.

However, Cossitt's motion required unanimous consent and Liberal MPs shouted "no" when Speaker James Jerome asked whether there was such agreement.

Cossitt asked whether the profit had gone into the Liberal party's 1972 federal election campaign fund. A judicial inquiry should examine all donations received by the Liberal party before and after the Oct. 30, 1972, election, he said.

Sky Shops learned in the spring of 1972 that the lease for its duty-free shop at Montreal's Dorval airport would be extended to 1980.

Shortly after company shareholders, who expected to make $20 a share later that year when the company was sold to P. Lawson Travel agency, sold 5,000 shares to Sen. Giguere at $1 apiece.

Giguere, a Liberal fund-raiser sold the shares that November for $20 each to the travel agency, making $95,000 on a $5,000 investment.

Cossitt said outside the House he got his information from two sources — on in the government and another in the Liberal organization.

The Senator said he bought into the company at the invitation of then Sky Shops Chairman Louis Lapointe who was "an old friend" and the $1 price was that paid by all the original shareholders.

He said he received a verbal offer from Lapointe in late 1969 or early 1970 but delayed exercising it 'till 1972.

He said he had nothing to do with the lease renewal.

Major Sky Shop shareholders, including Lapointe and N H L president Clarence Campbell, voted shares from their own holdings to make up the 5,000 for the senator.

'Were all of them 'good friends' of the senator too?" asked Tory Elmer McKay who originally raised the issue in a petition to Justice Minister Ron Basford and Transport Minister Otto Lang.

He also asked why there was no written record of the option in the June 12, 1972, transaction when in Sky Shops minutes another option granted one James Lavery — at $11 a share — is set forth in very clear terms on June 9, 1972.

MacKay also asked why there was a two-year gap between the time Senator Giguere received a verbal offer to buy and the moment he decided to exercise his option.

The name of Health Minister Marc Lalonde has also cropped up from the days when he was principal secretary to the prime minister and Lapointe wrote him saying the renewal application was bogged down in the transport department.

Lalonde has denied arguing Sky Shops' case. All he had done was ask officials to look at the matter in much the same way that he passed on hundreds of similar complaints at the time.

MacKay says he will continue pressing for a judicial inquiry into the whole matter and adds that he does not believe the whole thing will be swept under the rug.

He has indicated he has more information on the case but that he is waiting to see what the government will do before releasing any more.

The Mackay petition and other documents handed to Lang and Basford say among other things that the Sky Shops lease was extended in 1972 to 1980 under more favorable terms than those given the operator of the duty-free shop at Toronto International Airport.

Mackay asked why Sky Shops got its renewal in 1972 at a rate of 12.5 per cent return to the government when the Toronto International Shop was paying 15 per cent in 1970.

Lang was hooted as he said "It would be helpful to be a little more careful" in looking at the figures.

He said the Toronto International operator was paying 15 per cent on the first $150,000 in sales but only five per cent on further sales.

Sky Shops, under a lease negotiated in 1964, had been paying five per cent until the new figure, which he said was roughly equivalent to Toronto International's, was negotiated in 1972.

Socreds Repeat Extension Request

The Social Credit party repeated its request today for a one-week extension of the deadline for registration on the voters' list for the Dec. 11 provincial election.

Party president Peter Hyndman told a news conference that Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall had rejected the party's initial request made Thursday on the grounds that the Election Act does not provide for such a date change.

However, Hyndman said Section 197 of the Act would allow the government to alter any election-related date.

"So the machinery is there to extend the voter registration deadline," Hyndman said, and repeated his appeal to have it moved to midnight Nov. 19.

Hyndman said the New Democratic Party government "with the stroke of a pen" brought in the price freeze last month and permitted a $100-million over-run last year in the human resources department.

"If they can do those things with the stroke of a pen it is just not believable that they cannot extend the voter registration deadline."

Mr. Hyndman said a one-week extension of the deadline would allow another 15,000 people to register.

GANDHI WINS CASE

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi won her batttle in the courts today to void the conviction on charges of corrupt campaign practices which led her to resort to emergency rule in India for months ago.

After seven weeks of arguments and four weeks of deliberation, five members of the Supreme Court upheld the validity of retroactive amendments to the election law declaring that the offences of which Mrs. Gandhi was convicted last June 12 were no longer offences.

The court's ruling on a constitutional amendment making the prime minister's conviction null and void was to be announced later. But Mrs. Gandhi's opponents conceded that the verdict in favor of the election-law amendments automatically overturned her conviction and ended the legal case against her.

Hundreds of persons gathered outside the prime minister's residence to demonstrate their support. Carry flags of her government Congress party, they shouted over and over: "Indira Gandhi Zindabad Long Live Indira Gandhi!"

J. P. Goyal, one of the lawyers who helped guide the long legal battle against Mrs. Gandhi, commented: "She won, but everyone now knows she won only with the help of retroactive laws passed for her benefit."

General to Rule In Bangladesh

NEW DELHI (UPI) — A general ousted as army commander only five days ago seized absolute power in Bangaldesh today and declared martial law.

It was the third political upheaval in Bangladesh in three months.

In a broadcast over Radio Dacca, Maj.-Gen. Ziaur Rahman said he had assumed the power of chief martial law administrator and army commander in Bangladesh.

"I had to take over for the time being at the request of the people, armed forces, navy, air force, Bangaldesh rifles, police and others," Rahman said in a broadcast monitored in New Delhi.

The 39-year-old general made no mention of A. M. Sayem, a supreme court judge sworn in as president Thursday on the resignation of President Khondakar Mushtaque Ahmed.

Ahmed, who had ruled Bangladesh for less that three months, was reduced to a figurehead role Monday in a coup d'etat by senior army officers.

Diplomats said the senior officers were angry at the power of the junior commanders that placed Ahmed in power in an Aug. 15 coup.

The Radio Dacca broadcast made no mention of the fate of Brig.-Gen. Khaled Musharaff, the strongman in Monday's takeover. It did not say how the new power shift took place.

Rahman was appointed army chief after the Aug. 15 military-backed coup in which the father of Bangladesh, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, was slain.

Spain Threatens War on Sahara

Times News Services

MADRID — The Spanish cabinet met Thursday in an atmosphere of crisis as more than 100,000 Moroccan marchers, defying the United Nations Spain and Algeria, trekked over the border into the disputed North African territory of Spanish Sahara, while Spanish jets flew overhead.

Although Spain has made it clear it wants to decolonize the mineral-rich wasteland as fast as feasible under a United Nations plan, it has warned Morocco that Spanish troops there will fire on marchers penetrating beyond a pre-announced "free' frontier zone 10 miles deep.

MOBILE HOMES

A mobile home consultant should be hired and an advisory committee on mobile and manufactured homes should be set up by the housing department to advise the government on the growing industry, said the report.

Young families and senior citizens are the main owners of mobile homes and have chosen this housing form because of its low cost, its easy care and its resale value.

In recommending that mobile homes be treated by the government "as far as possible" in the same manner as conventional homes, the report said the home warranty scheme being considered by the government should be extended to mobile homes and the set-up of the home on its pad should also be warranted.

A mobile home registry requiring a registration plate for all units should be established, it said, and the department of housing would have to give permission for the removal of any unit.

The government should prepare a model by-law covering mobile home parks for use by municipalities and regional districts as well as providing a descriptive guide for park developers.

The B.C. Assessment Authority should attempt to make assessment procedures as uniform as possible through B.C. and arrangements should be made so taxes are not paid twice if a home is moved during the year.

'Squeaky' Dragged From Court

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Lynette Fromme was dragged shouting from the courtroom by U.S. marshals today, declaring that if convicted mass killer Charles Manson does not get a new trial, "lives will be lost all over the country."

"Manson and that famiy is my own heartbeat and if they can't be here I can't get a fair trial and there will be lives lost all over the country. I want to change my plea to guilty," she blurted.

Ignorance of Ethics

While on the surface at least there seems to have been nothing illegal committed in the two "scandals" involving a Montreal airport franchise and a Liberal senator, and a $300,000 confidential fund for Conservative MP Claude Wagner, the principals in both affairs seem to have rudely ignored basic ethics and rudimentary political morality.

Senator Louis Giguere, a Quebec "backroom boy" appointed to the upper chamber a few months after the 1968 election by Prime Minister Trudeau for faithful service to the Liberal party, saw nothing wrong in an arrangement in June, 1972, that allowed him to buy at $1 apiece 5,000 shares of a company negotiating for renewal of a federal concession, when the firm's executive committee had set the price at $20 a share in January that same year. The company's chairman, Louis Lapointe, had offered him an option on the shares in 1969 or 1970, but Giguere did not take it up then.

Two months after the senator purchased the bargain-price shares, the company won renewal of its licence. It has also got the franchise at the new Montreal airport, Mirabel. According to Conservative MP Elmer McKay, the firm was outbid by two other companies in the minimum return guaranteed the government, and the percentage of gross sales.

Why was the senator, an old friend of Lapointe's, allowed to buy into the firm at such a low price at such a crucial time? It would have seemed a very risky investment, a flier on a firm that was having trouble hanging onto its franchise. Was mere friendship the only factor involved? Or was Giguere, as a Liberal party man with some influence, expected to act as Ottawa lobbyist for the company?

"The story is quite different if you know all the facts," says Giguere. Perhaps, but he hasn't provided the information. And it isn't likely to come out in an inquiry staged by the senate, which Senator Ray Perrault, the government leader, proposed on Tuesday.

Can the pot investigate the kettle for being black? The entire senate is riddled with conflicts of interest, interlocking directorships and retainers for firms big and small.

A judicial inquiry, independent of politics, seems the only way to get to the bottom of it.

On the other side of the floor, the disclosure — after years of rumors — of a fund which provides $1,000 a month extra income to Wagner, on top of his parliamentary salary of $34,600—almost a third of it a tax-free expense allowance—provides an example of a conflict of interest just as dangerous.

Wagner himself sees nothing wrong in the fund. Three prominent Liberal prime ministers, Laurier, Mackenzie King and Lester Pearson, all benefitted from similar deals, he says in defence. So, might we add, did Sir John Alexander Macdonald. But old traditions, no matter how widespread in the past, are necessarily good ones.

He is amazingly insensitive about the dangers of his cosy arrangement. One might expect the party which has governed Canada for all but five of the last 40 years to have grown sloppy in power, but the lean and hungry Tories? Who have been righteous to a man about comparatively minor pecadilloes such as Health Minister Marc Lalonde's acceptance of a free ride to Israel on the private jet of distillery magnate Sam Bronfman?

Arrangements such as Wagner's —the money was raised by three Toronto lawyers, among them the Tories' chief bagman — may not contravene the letter of the law, but they are quite inconsistent with the spirit of the new election spending laws and the position of his own party on conflict of interest. If he expects himself to be taken seriously as a Tory leadership candidate, Wagner should extricate himself as soon as possible from this entanglement.

Parliamentary?

Esquimalt MLA James Gorst in India studying parliamentary behavior? Ah yes, at the feet of that famous democrat and parliamentarian Indira Gandhi. Seems comparable to, say, sending a delegation to study human rights in Uganda under dictator Idi Amin, or freedom of speech in that haven of civil liberties, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Or was our Jimmy picking up pointers for the provincial government on how Mrs. Gandhi makes a price freeze stick and prevents black markets—a few thousand salutary arrests and detention incognito?

"... what doesn't go in, can't come out ..."

Fuzzy Thinking on Housing

OTTAWA — One of the most serious areas of social tension confronting this country today lies in the developing shortage of reasonably-priced rental accommodation and anything the government does to prevent that situation from becoming critical is almost by definition a good thing.

But housing generally is a motherhood subject, rarely subjected to hard-headed discussion. The result is that whenever a government announces any scheme to increase the housing supply it can count upon a good deal of automatic praise. The plaudits will not always be justified.

There is no evidence that the government viewed urban affairs minister Barney Danson's recently announced $750 million housing program within the total context and some that it did not.

Special Taxes Needed

The ideal situation over a period of years would be a steady supply of new housing coming onto the market without too much fluctuation from year to year and certainly without interference from government tap-turning. There should be a healthy mix of units available for sale and for rent. So far as possible, the costs of the necessary services should be separated from the capital cost of the housing unit, as they used to be. They should be borne by special development taxes.

The contemporary trend to incorporate all costs of services into the original capital value of the house or apartment has a permanently inflationary effect on prices. It became a trend through the inadequacies of municipal finance. Because builders are relatively unpopular with the general public any effort to shove all initial costs onto them had popular appeal. But it was one of the ways in which politicians at all three levels of government most seriously failed the public.

The effect of this techique is to incorporate servicing costs onto the capital value of housing, rather than keeping them separate. The result is to force up the price of the unit. This will be true not just for the limited period during which the costs of the services are being paid off but for the entire lifetime of the structure. Beyond that, no individual can borrow money at as low a rate as a government. Permanently higher financing costs for the basic services become involved until the building is paid for and whenever it is resold.

Danson's policies presumably reflect the experience of that very successful builder, William Teron, who (in a remarkable concentration of power in one pair of hands) now heads both the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. and serves as deputy minister of urban affairs. The element of healthy control of power may be absent but the builder's expertise is there.

One of the better aspects of the policies emerging from this strange situation is the attempt to get municipalities back into their old function of encouraging residential construction. Many do not because they fear additional costs. But a $1,000 per unit grant is merely an expedient, where the true solution lies in a long-overdue new approach to the problems of urban finance.

The subsidization of rental housing for more than the low income groups is, in principle, unattractive. The need for it is a sign of the malaise of our times. Until interest rates can be reduced generally, however, there does not seem to be much alternative to subsidizing them for poeple at economic levels where this sort of state assistance would never had been thought of in the past.

The governmerzt's experience over the application of capital cost allowances on rental housing is the sort of thing that makes one doubt the good sense, not merely of the politicians who hold elected office, but of the appointed officials who back them up, sometimes in near-idiocy. Until the end of 1977, capital cost allowances on rental accommodation —that is, depreciation—can be used to reduce the owner's other income where they cannot be fully applied to the income from the building itself.

Until a few years ago, this provision of tax law was one of the incentives for investment in rental housing and it had special appeal to people, such as doctors and lawyers, who have good incomes from other sources. In the course of tax reform, however, it was abolished in the interest of "equity" and without much thought of the factors that had made Canada a basically well-housed country. As the supply of new rental housing began to dry up, some rethinking was done and the government took a useful step backwards. It had now decided not to undo its corrective move for another couple of years.

Sentimental View

As to the severity of the shortage of rental housing that is developing, one of Ottawa's leading builders told me 10 days ago that he does not know of a single significant rental project under way here at the present time on an unsubsidized basis. His group recently decided to put up an apartment building on an attractive site they own, spent substantially on plans and then, when all the cost estimates were done they concluded that the project was impractical. The lowest possible economic rents would have been too high for the community. They did not proceed.

The weakest parts of the Danson program arise through the almost sentimental attachment to home ownership no matter what the economic circumstances of the day may be. It is not a major social problem if young couples have to wait two or three years for lower interest rates before they buy a house. To provide subsidies so they can do it while economic circumstances are as disadvantageous as one can imagine is not a justifiable use of the public funds, nor is it fair to the taxpayers from whom the money must be extracted.

It is, indeed, an almost classic example of pandering to the precise problem which Prime Minister Trudeau denounces so readily—the revolution of rising expectations which leads people to believe that they must have the best things of life instantly without waiting even for a sensible moment to secure them.

It is one more example of the fuzzy, incoherent thinking that mars so many of this government's approaches to the nation's problems.

TOM WICKER

Why Ford Shuffled the Lineup

WASHINGTON — The hand that sacrificed Nelson Rockefeller to the right wing of the U.S. Republican party — if that is what Gerald Ford has done — also reached out strongly to the moderate Republican centre. At first glance, the result seems to strengthen Ford's chance for renomination, and to raise the possibility of a Ford-Ronald Reagan ticket next year.

There is no doubt that the White House takes the possibility of a Reagan challenge seriously. When Howard (Bo) Callaway had just described Reagan was asked last Sunday which Democrat the president expected to have to run against in 1976, Callaway declined to answer on grounds that to do so could only boost the Democrat he named.

"But there's not one I'm afraid of," he said. "I'll just be glad to get one of them instead of Ronald Reagan."

Callaway had just described Reagon as a formidable Republican primary opponent who would run strongly in two of the earliest primaries, New Hampshire and Florida. These remarks together suggest the extent to which the potential Reagan candidacy is perceived in the Ford camp as the biggest threat to the president's re-election.

But if that strategic judgment was the motivating force behind the high level shakeup of the Ford administration, it was immediately apparent only in the withdrawal of Rockefeller. He has been a bad word to the Republican right wing since 1964 (when he challenged Goldwater head-on), and if his pull-out proves to have been forced by Ford it might be effective in holding the support of some conservatives against a Reagan challenge. However it came about, Rockefeller's departure opens the way for the vice-presidency to be offered to Reagan himself, if necessary.

The rest of the administration shakeup at first glance appears to be more nearly a compensating bid to Republican moderates. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger does not lose much but a title, since he is replaced as director of the National Security Council by his local second banana, Brent Scowcroft. Kissinger may even be strengthened, as he will no longer be vulnerable to the charge of wearing too many hats.

The dismissal of James R. Schlesinger as secretary of defence can hardly be a comfort to conservatives, since Schlesinger was the leading administration skeptic as to Kissinger's version of detente, and one of the few Ford officials with the intellectual stature to stand up to the secretary of state.

Ford filled the opening at the Pentagon with a Republican generally considered a moderate, Donald Rumsfeld; replaced William Colby, an embarrassment as the director of the CIA in its days of disrepute, with another moderate, George Bush; and sent Elliot Richardson, whom many conservatives regard as the man who blew the whistle on Richard Nixon, to the department of commerce. It's doubtful that any of these changes amused Barry Goldwater fans.

Callaway, speaking in Florida to a group of businessmen meeting there, developed a non-ideological theme as he waxes lyrical about Ford. His greatest asset, Callaway said of the president, was that he had restored respect for the White House and the government — first, by being "just a guy that everybody likes," second, by his "courageous" vetoes of spending bills and his stand against "bailing out" New York City.

"Even if you don't always agree with this president," Callaway said, in what sounded rather like a slogan, "you've got to admire his courage. He stands up for what he believes." Not bad in this time of political cynicism.

Kissinger Was Mastermind

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger two weeks ago put the decision squarely in President Ford's lap — decide between two irreconcilable positions on the strategic arms package being negotiated with the Soviet Union.

Kissinger left little doubt in his private talks with Ford, official informants disclosed, that he would resign if the chief executive decided in favor of the Pentagon position advocated by Defence Chief James Schlesinger.

Administration sources insisted that was the situation despite Ford's statement at his press conference this week that neither personal nor policy differences contributed to the changes in his cabinet officers. He said he just wanted his team — "my guys."

Kissinger also reportedly made clear to Ford his own conviction that adopting the Pentagon's recommendations would destroy any hope of a nuclear arms pact and could lead to a Kremlin shakeup that would seriously jeopardize U.S.-Soviet detente.

But the dispute over the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, which is at the centre of the administration shakeup that removed the defence chief, was not its only cause.

Personal relations between Kissinger and Schlesinger had soured to such a point that Kissinger withheld this summer's Israeli-Egyptian negotiations, fearing they would be deliberately leaked and would sabotage chances for an accord.

Schlesinger also was angered over Kissinger's private assurances that a "positive" response would be forthcoming to Israel's bid for Pershing missiles, which can be equipped with nuclear warheads. Kissinger reportedly had not discussed the matter with Schlesinger for eight months.

The heart of the power feud, however, was the strategic arms quarrel which culminated in a National Security Council decision in mid-September that went against Kissinger's recommendations but which he was instructed to present to Soviet officials as U.S. policy.

The Rainmaker in PM's Office Avoids Washout at Liberal Meet

By VICTOR MACKIE

OTTAWA — Just before the Liberal national convention is scheduled to get underway this weekend two elements that could have aroused sharp controversy and confrontation were removed.

Senator Keith Davey of Ontario has decided not to run for the presidency of the party.

And ex-finance minister John Turner took off last weekend with his wife to have a sunshine vacation in Mexico. With Turner absent the dissidents within the party who are upset with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau will have no key figure to rally around.

With Davey out of the running for the presidency, delegates who were determined to vote against him to register their dissatisfaction with party policy and the prime minister have lost that opportunity.

Part of this unhappiness stems from Trudeau's attitude toward the party's members and its hierarchy.

Senator Al Graham of Nova Scotia last week made it known he would enter the race for the presidency. He had a good chance of winning against Davey, as many delegates would have voted for him to show their annoyance with the Trudeau-Davey establishment.

Earlier Senator Gildas Molgat of Manitoba was being pressured to seek a second term as president. However he refused. He said he wanted to have "more time with my family." He is known to have been disturbed at being bypassed when some key party decisions were made by Trudeau and his power broker, Davey.

An approach was made to A. C. (Tony) Abbott, member of parliament for Mississauga, to run for the presidency. However after thinking about it he said "thanks, but no thanks." He had heard the rumbles from within the party and had talked to Molgat.

Senator Davey played a leading role in the successful election campaign waged by Trudeau in 1974. Since then, his stock with the prime minister has risen high. When the PM wants advice on political matters in English Canada he turns to the senator.

This has lessened the role that the party president played in the past in consultation with the prime minister, and this has caused resentment in some party circles. When approaches to Molgat and Abbott to seek the presidency failed, the word went around that Davey would himself run for the presidency, adding to the resentment.

The unexpected announcement by Seantor Graham that he would enter the race gave the dissidents a man to vote for against the "power broker." Westerners have not been backward in voicing their annoyance at the Trudeau-Davey combination seemingly by-passing the party's executive. Many had expected Molgat to seek a second term; when he did not it confirmed their fears that all was not well within the party's hierarchy.

One Montreal Liberal said a quick canvass of delegates to the Liberal convention indicated there was a growing vote for Graham. If Davey remained in the race and was defeated it would have been a "loss of face" for the senator and for the prime minister.

One report has it that Davey, during his visit to Winnipeg last month, took a quick sounding of western reaction to his running for the presidency. He apparently was not happy with what he found. Voting on the presidency will take place Saturday night.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of November 7, 1915

A prominent local druggist, interviewed by a Times reporter today on why the price of drugs had gone up to such an extent since the war began, threw some light on the subject. One reason, he said, is that Canada depends almost entirely upon other nations for supplies of chemicals, drugs, barks and roots and herbs, some of which previous to the war came from Germany. The demands of the munitions makers for some of the same supplies has also pushed up prices. Carbolic acid, for example, has risen some two thousand per cent in price.

'Let New Doctors Serve'

By PAUL ST.PIERRE
The Sun

There have been suggestions that immigrant doctors should be obliged to spend their first few years in remote areas of Canada where people lack good medical service.

Those of us who think this is a modest request must be wrongheaded. It turns out that this is only a few steps removed from fascism and the gas chambers.

The immigrants, we are told, would be deprived of precious civil rights. They should be allowed to indulge their greed just like the native doctors in the big cities.

One spokesman for the B.C. Human Rights Commission expanded on this theme during a radio interview. Why, he asked, should Canadians in remote areas be obliged to accept second-class medical services?,

He did not volunteer any evidence that non-Canadian doctors are all second class nor did he explain why, if this be so, they should be allowed to paw around in the intestines of the city folks in preference to the benighted frontiersmen. Most debates such as this one generate more heat than light.

Nobody yet has dared to suggest that Canadian citizens hold prior rights to Canada and that this includes a right to say who will come into this country, when and under what conditions.

Jack Pickersgill said it best, almost 20 years ago when he was minister of citizenship and immigration: "Nobody from another country has the right to demand Canadian citizenship."

Having said it, Mr. Pickersgill proceeded to ignore his own counsel and admit an itinerant faker named George Christian Hanna. Mr. Hanna, a Somaliland citizen, had convinced some newspapermen, who were more gullible than immigration officers, that he was a man without a country.

The efforts of the immigration department to get him off the doorstep were presented to the public as cruel and inhuman treatment. The government's callousness was a factor in the Diefenbaker election triumph of that time.

Within 18 months the new Progressive Conservative government deported Mr. Hanna to Lebanon, whence he had come. The police were weary of picking him up for various offences and the public was tired of him too.

The notion generated in Mr. Hanna's time has not disappeared with him. There are still some among us who feel that Canada, alone among the nations, should have the front door open to anyone who cares to come in and use the bathroom and the refrigerator.

Admitting any doctors from impoverished nations is not easy to justify on humanitarian grounds anyway. Impoverished countries need doctors more than Canadians do. They don't thank us for snatching graduates from their medical schools.

If doctors are to immigrate here, why in the sweet name of sanity shouldn't they be obliged to spend a term serving Canadians who need them?

Any prospective immigrant who doesn't like the pay and conditions at Cambridge Bay or Chimo has a perfectly good solution available to him. He can stay home and join a civil-liberties association in his own country.

Directing immigrants to where they're needed has been the standard, almost unvarying practice of every West European nation for 30 years. Several will never permit the immigrants to take out citizenship papers.

CATHOLIC PRIEST from Belgium is taken away by South Korean police in Seoul during demonstration protesting the deportation of an American Methodist missionary and demanding the release of political prisoners.

The Work Ethic vs Reality

By LEONARD SHIFRIN

OTTAWA—There is a lot of talk these days about the work ethic. Some say it is in danger and others say it is stronger than ever.

Both camps are probably right, because they seem to be talking about different things.

Those who see the work ethic as meaning the belief that people should work are worried that some people may be managing not to. Those who see it as meaning that people should want to work answer that people do want to work, so the ethic is in no danger.

And the kibitzer on the sidelines asks what they both mean by work.

What has confused the issue so thoroughly is that we have accepted a definition of work as activity for which remuneration is provided. Thus volunteer community work wasn't work until someone offered to pay for it. That's what LIP did and that's part of why volunteerism is going through an agony of soul-searching at the moment.

The National Organization for Women in the United States has no doubts about volunteerism. It regards it as the economic exploitation of women which volunteers almost invariably are. It's not concerned about the work ethic. Its quarrel is with the pay ethic—or lack of same where women's work is concerned.

Not too long ago there was a lot of debate about the number of mothers entering the labor force—whether mothers working was a good or bad thing. People who said it was a bad thing insisted they should be home raising their kids. But wasn't that work?

Indeed it was, so another set of voices started calling for it to be paid for. Their cry is for salaries for housewives, but what they really mean is salaries for mothers providing child care in the home, just as for strangers providing it in child care centres.

All very confusing for those concerned about saving the work ethic. How can they save it if it won't stand still?

LIP said it would pay salaries to people engaged in activities of community value. New Horizons, the counterpart program for senior citizens, said it wouldn't, since the over 65's already get comparable incomes, whether they work or not, from the government's pension programs. Are senior citizens on New Horizons' projects not working while more junior citizens on similar LIP or OFY projects are?

What if LIP had decided to pay only overhead costs of projects, as New Horizons does, leaving the income payments to Unemployment Insurance? Would those on the projects still have been working?

The same people would have been doing the same things, receiving the same incomes, and at the same total cost to government, but according to our present definitions of work, they would have shown on the rolls as unemployed rather than employed. Since the unemployment numbers game ranks with the monthly inflation index as the number one political game in town, it's not very surprising that government didn't choose the New Horizons-Unemployment Insurance route. But the real effect would have been the same either way.

Except that the folks who worry about the work ethic would have gotten all upset.

The whole problem started not with anyone challenging the work ethic, but with the emergence of new economic and social patterns.

The rate of would-be labor force participation grew as the generation of the postwar baby boom reached job-seeking age and as groups such as married women increasingly sought paid employment. At the same time the labor intensiveness of Western industrial economies had begun to decline with machines increasingly replacing people.

Former United Automobile Workers' president, Walter Reuther, after touring a highly automated General Motors assembly plant, is reported to have asked a GM vice-president who General Motors thought would buy the cars turned out by the almost workerless plant, other machines? The point he was making was well understood half a century earlier by Henry Ford.

Mr. Ford is best remembered for having introduced the assembly line. But that wasn't his only revolutionary innovation. He also paid his workers three times the then-current industrial wage, deliberately forcing wages up throughout the economy. His reason was quite simple. Unless enough people were earning enough money to buy his cars, there wouldn't be much use for his assembly line.

The idea that the interests of employers would be best served by their deliberately tripling their wage costs was a truly revolutionary challenge to the conventional economic wisdom of the day. Today's conventional wisdom is facing an equally far-reaching set of challenges.

More and more jobs—or opportunities for productive activity—will need to be created as the labor force continues to grow and traditional forms of employment continue to decline. And at the same time we have to develop non-stigmatizing mechanisms for providing adequate incomes to those who cannot be accommodated in this proportionally shrinking traditional job market.

The unemployment rolls may cease to rise when thousands of would-be workers give up on finding jobs, but that can hardly be regarded as a satisfactory long-term solution. Neither can having economists redefine "full employment" from three per cent unemployment to four per cent to five per cent. Such ostrich responses satisfy appearances, but ignore two sets of realities.

The first is that these surplus workers and their families have the same income needs as they had before they gave up the fight and the economists redefined them into non-existence. The other is that the economy needs their purchasing power. As both Henry Ford and Walter Reuther well understood, there is not much point to a capacity to produce more and more cars if less and less people are in a position to buy them.

Programs like LIP, which launched its fifth year this week, represent a small step forward and a large step sideways. Like a finger in the dike, they don't really solve the problem, but they do hold back the water for a time.

CHURCHES TAKE UP THE CUDGELS

By JOHN DEEDY

In its historical context, the term "church militant" evokes the Crusades and Popes seeking to make the Holy Land safe for Christianity; or Pope Julius II at the head of a 16th-century army, riding to secure the power and the reach of the Papal States. In the context of of Roman Catholicism's "communion of saints"; the union of the faithful on earth struggling to save their souls, so as to pass on to the "church suffering" (purgatory) and thence to the "church triumphant" (heaven).

But this is not the 20th-century church. Popes no longer head armies or march communicants off on crusades; the Papal State is demilitarized, its territory a symbolic 108.7 acres. The catechetical concept of community has been radically altered by Vatican Council II and its aftermath. For many Catholics, purgatory is now more speculative than real; and ecclesiastical emphases accent service to humanity over narrow preoccupation with individual salvation.

Still the idea of the church militant is not dead. A leftist Catholic militancy has taken shape in certain areas of the world. It is not in Lebanon, where Maronite Christians and Moslems are returning the word militancy to its literal meaning, or in Ireland, where Roman Catholics and Protestants have been bloodying one another for years. In both these places religion may define the contending parties, but theological and dogmatic issues have long since been overwhelmed by political considerations.

In Latin America

The new militancy is rather on behalf of social change and human progress and is centred principally in Latin America and parts of Western Europe and the Far East.

In South Korea, the new militancy is embodied in a bishop, Daniel Chi Hak Soun, jailed last year for demanding restraints on the dictatorial powers of President Park Chung Hee. In Honduras it is a priest and a laywoman, Ivan Betancourt and Maria Elena Vargas, dying at the hands of Honduran troops and agents of landlords seeking to halt a march of land-hungry campesinos last June. In Portugal it is the Archbishop of Braga, Francisco Maria da Silva, helping rally a church militant against a possible totalitarianism of the left under the Communist party and Premier Vasco Goncalves, and subsequently ousted.

Opposition to a Communist Portugal does reflect the deep official Catholic bias against Communism. But in most instances, the militant new activism dramatizes the new social dimensions within Catholicism. It dramatizes particularly the sensitivity of more and more Catholics to the human depredations born of what they regard as the inequitable workings of an unjust social order. (In Porgual 35 per cent of the gross national population is illiterate; in Latin America 40 per cent of the gross national product is drained away by foreign countries, mainly the United States.)

Refashion Society

Nowhere have these new emphases been more pronounced than in Latin America, where a "theology of liberation" has taken root. It would create a humane society on earth through the refashioning of the social, economic and political structures which are seen as fostering injustices, manifest, for example, in suppression of the poor in the name of economic and political law and order. In focusing on the human condition, the theology of liberation is comfortable with Marxian economic theory, antithetical towards capitalist enterprise (notably what it sees as American economic imperialism) and not always above physical violence, at least among its most radical adherents.

The radicals' rationale is that violence even unto death is better than compromise with injustice. If is a rationale that has produced two celebrated martyrs for the movement: Camilo Torres, a young Colombian priest who died in 1966 while leading a guerrilla force against what he considered a corrupt landlord government in Bogota; and Nestor Paz, a Bolivian university student who died of starvation in the wilds during the Teoponte guerrilla campaign of 1970.

Violence for the cause of liberation theology is generally frowned upon, but curiously enough those who practice it find some of their justification in two weighty Vatican documents. Vatican II's Constitution on the Church in the Modern World declares it "lawful" for people "to defend their own rights and those of their fellow citizens" where public authority "oversteps its competence and oppresses the people." And Pope Paul VI's 1967 encyclical "Populorum Progressio" (On the Development of Peoples) concedes the possibility of "revolutionary activity" where there is "manifest, long-standing tyranny which would do great damage to fundamental personal rights and dangerous harm to the common good of the country."

Vatican authorities make plain that neither statement is to be construed as an invitation to violence. In the full context of the texts, they point out, both statements are conditioned by restraints. They note too that revolutionary activity includes a range of options short of physical violence, such as the exertion of pressures for structural reforms of society and the reorientation of corporate interests.

Marxism Avoided

The Vatican's reservations, apparently, are not only over means, but also over ends. Unlike liberation theology, the Vatican is not comfortable with economic Marxism as a method of "interpretation" and "change" of society, probably, among other reasons, because of the atheism implicit in Marxist ideology. It so indicated recently in criticizing what it called the "pseudo-theological" positions of Christians for Socialism in Italy.

The socio-political movement originated in Latin America in the 1960's: since it has reached out to Europe, Canada, the Philippines and Vietnam. Christians for Socialism see theirs as an effort to bear witness and live the Christian life in a struggle for socialism that would liberate people from economic slavery.

Nor is there total enthusiasm in the Latin-American tendencies. At their 1968 meeting in Medellin, Colombia, Latin-American bishops denounced "institutionalized violence"—evils that transcend individuals, such as war and consumerism—and deplored the "social sin" which sees the concentration of wealth and opportunity in the hands of a few. But the breakthrough that seemed imminent on the official level has not been forthcoming.

The ferment of liberation theology has not begun to be felt strongly in American Catholicism, at least not yet. Orois Books, the publishing house of the Maryknoll Fathers in Maryknoll, N.Y., has established itself as a source of liberation-theology literature. Last August some 200 theologians, social scientists and others gathered in Detroit for a conference featuring Gustavo Gutierrez, the Peruvian priest who has emerged as the movement's "chief ideologue through his book "A Theology of Liberation."

But generally the United States Catholic scene is quiescent. Philip Berrigan was arrested last month for spraying the word "death" on military planes at national air show in East Hartford. And the Justice and peace Commission of the United States Catholic Conference, which deals with many of the same issues as the theology of liberation, is now under the direction of a monsignor with impressive social credentials: Francis J. Lally, for nine years head of the Boston Redevlopment Authority. Nevertheless, American Catholic activists appear to be still in transition from bearing witness against the Vietnam war to acting on new questions that affect the social condition.

Suffer the Little Children

russell baker

For a long while there are babies, which are followed almost eternally by children, who progress into an endless night of adolescence, and then, one day, entirely without warning, it is like this:

The children all came home the other day. In anticipation of their arrival, we had both put on jeans and stacked the turntable with rock 'n' roll records. Barney arrived first. He was wearing a flannel suit, a striped broadcloth shirt with a Liberty silk tie and Italian loafers.

"Don't you think it's time you moved up from jeans?" he inquired, but we couldn't hear him because of the rock 'n' roll, and he lost his temper.

"Turn off that record player, or I'll smash it!" he shouted, but we still couldn't hear him, so he smashed it.

"Gosh, Barney," we said, "it's great to have you home again and we've got some real fun on the program. Guess what! This afternoon we're all going to the amusment park and ride the ferris wheel."

Barney scowled. He said he hated the ferris wheel. What's more, he had a headache. All he wanted was to have a little quiet so he could read Proust. "You two go to the amusement park," he said, "but don't eat too much spun candy or it'll spoil your dinner."

Barney had scarcely settled down in the study with Proust when Cora Sue arrived. She took one look around the house and said: "What's the matter with you two? This place is a pigpen. Dust on the harmonium, towels on the bathroom floor, dirty breakfast dishes still in the sink, filthy fingerprints all over the woodwork."

We said, aw, come on, Cora Sue, why should we worry about neatness all the time when there was a ferris wheel to ride on? But Cora Sue said, "There'll be no ferris wheel for either of you until you get this mess cleaned up. Understand?" and she handed us bucket, mop, dust cloth and scouring powder.

We didn't argue with Cora Sue, since she was likely to be the one paying our Social Security before long, and we were afraid she might cut our allowance if we talked back.

The phone rang several times, but Cora Sue wouldn't let us answer it. "No wonder you get nothing done, with that stupid telephone ringing all day long," she said. "Don't you have anything better to do than spend your lives prattling away to idle friends?"

After dinner we announced that we were going to take all the children to the movies. "You'll do nothing of the sort," said Cora Sue. "Not until that mess in the kitchen is cleaned up."

"Then you've got the first 10 pages of the Iliad to read," said Barney.

At 9:45 the children led us up to bed. Then Barney made us brush our teeth, and then inspected them, and then sent us back to brush some more. They put out the bedroom light, shut the door and tiptoed away. We could hear them faintly downstairs. They were arguing about which of them was to blame for the failures we were becoming.

There was a nasty sense of pride in the bedroom, which was justifiable. The children had turned out just like us.

No Snap Vote Over Controls

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau denied Thursday night that he has any plans for a quick election on the issue of wage and price controls.

"I don't see any reason why there would be an election," he said on The Watson Report, a CBC public affairs television program.

He was asked by interviewer Patrick Watson to comment on rumors that an election might be called by next spring.

Trudeau said his selective price-and-wage controls program seems generally popular, despite vocal criticism by organized labor. It was announced Oct. 13.

But he said the government is not gearing up for an election and there is no guarantee that the public would feel the same by the next election.

The last federal election was in July, 1974, and the next normally would not be held until 1978.

Trudeau said the government, which won the 1974 election by campaigning against controls, wouldn't have reversed its policy unless it had to.

But economic indicators suggested that inflation would hit 12-to-14 per cent in 1976 if nothing was done.

This upward trend in Canada was at odds with inflation trends in other countries, he added.

Watson said the Canadian trend might have reversed itself without controls, and it appeared to some that the government was trying to take the credit for an expected turn-around.

Bring Down Budget —NDP

OTTAWA (CP) — A series of tax changes, including breaks for mining and petroleum companies engaged in exploration, went through two parliamentary stages Thursday in the Commons.

The changes to the Income Tax Act, announced in the June 23 budget, were attacked by one New Democratic as out of line with the new federal anti-inflation program.

Max Saltsman said the government should introduce a budget more in line with its new controls policy.

The legislation also increases income tax by a maximum $250 a year for people with incomes over $22,973.

The group takes up just over three per cent of the country's taxpayers.

Another change gives business a five-per-cent tax credit for new investment in some machinery, buildings and equipment used in manufacturing and processing industries.

Jacques Trudel, parliamentary secretary for finance, said this change, retroactive to June 24, is needed to offset uncertain economic conditions and high financing costs.

Another change allows exemption from the normal with-holding tax on interest paid by Canadian business borrowing abroad.

The tax break for petroleum and mining companies engaged in exploration is designed to put at least $40 million more a year back in their hands when it takes effect next Jan. 1.

The bill was given second reading and clause-by-clause approval. It now needs third Commons reading, Senate approval and and routine royal assent before becoming law.

Saltsman said the tax changes make it easier for business to operate and continues a policy of increasing the tax burden on the middle income earner.

PENSIONS STUDIED

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons began second reading debate Thursday on a bill to provide equal pension status for male and female government employees, MPs and judges.

Under the legislation, the contribution rate of women government employees to federal employee pension plans rises to 6½ per cent of salary from the present five per cent.

Male surviving spouses would receive survivors' benefits equal to those now received by women whose husbands have died.

GOV'T HEALTH PLANS 'MOST EFFICIENT'

WASHINGTON (CP) Canada's experience with compulsory health insurance shows governments can insure health care more efficiently than the private insurance industry, Canadian Health Minister Marc Lalonde said today.

Addressing the National Institute of Medicine, Mr. Lalonde said the proof of government efficiency is the higher percentage of collected premiums and tax dollars paid out in health benefits.

The health minister said Canadians paid only $1.033 for every dollar paid out in 1973 for hospitalization and other health care costs.

In contrast, he noted, the private health insurance industry in Canada collected $1.55 in premiums for every dollar paid in benefits during the same year.

Lalonde said the Canadian experience indicates compulsory government insurance plans "seem to be the most efficient way to insure health services."

He explained that private companies continue to provide insurance against loss of income, dental fees, drugs and private hospital rooms in Canada.

Lalonde noted that "if we had the whole thing to do over again, knowing what we know now, we would again choose universal public plans."

"I don't wish to accuse private insurers of innefficiency," the minister added. "However, they are constrained by all sorts of expenditures such as premium collection, commissions and maintenance of a cash reserve that the government simply does not have."

The health minister arrived here Thursday to meet his U.S. counterpart, David Matthews.

He also visited Capitol Hill, explaining Canada's health care system to a number of congressmen and senators, including Senators Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Bill Brock of Tennessee.

Lalonde later told reporters he had been informed there is little likelihood Congress will pass a public health insurance scheme before the 1976 election.

Health plans being considered by Congress range from government insurance and tax credits to compensate for catastrophic illness to a more comprehensive insurance bill supported by Kennedy.

FEW SEEK REFUNDS

OTTAWA (CP) — Only about 8,000 of an estimated one million eligible individuals and companies have so far sought refunds of the 10 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline, a revenue department official said Thursday.

He said authorities fear motorists will cause chaos in the tax collection system by waiting until the busy income tax filing time next February and March to seek refunds.

The government has collected about $100 million in revenue from the tax since it was imposed in former finance minister John Turner's June 23 budget.

Refund payments have totalled only about $3 million, substantially less than expected, the official said.

He said there was "something illogical" about taxpayers not obtaining refunds to which they are entitled.

The tax is aimed at private motor vehicle users but is collected from all motorists at the gas pump.

Provinces May Get the Power To Curb Alien Land Ownership

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is prepared to grant the provinces power to prohibit foreigners from buying Canadian land, Prime Minister Trudeau has told provincial premiers.

This power now is limited to Ottawa under the Canadian Citizenship Act. But the prime ministers, in letters tabled in the Commons on Thursday, said Ottawa is willing, under certain conditions, to transfer the power.

However, he also said he hopes the provinces will not prohibit land ownership by Canadians and landed immigrants not living in the province where the land is held.

Some provinces, saying they need the power to restrict or prohibit land ownership by aliens, had requested an amendment to the citizenship act.

Last June, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld a Prince Edward Island law allowing the province to limit to 10 acres the amount of island land non-residents can own. The court rejected arguments that this discriminates against Canadians in other provinces.

The prime minister, in the letters to the premiers, said that ruling left uncertainty about the precise implications for possible provincial legislation dealing solely with land ownership by aliens.

Therefore, if the provinces agreed, Ottawa would amend the citizenship act so that ownership of Canadian land by aliens would be subject to conditions imposed by provincial governments.

Trudeau said, however, the amendment would ensure that this power could not deny citizen landed immigrants the right to own land. It could not conflict with federal international obligations, discriminate between aliens, hinder land ownership for diplomatic or consular purposes, or apply to land acquired in transactions approved under the Foreign Investment Review Act.

Also, this would not preclude further action by Parliament to regulate foreign ownership.

Trudeau noted that several provinces have indicated that they have no desire to restrict Canadian ownership rights.

But he reiterated the federal government's objection to any province that does.

SEAL HUNT PROTECTED

OTTAWA (CP) — Fisheries Minister Romeo Leblanc said Thursday that interference with the east coast seal hunt is strictly prohibited by government regulations.

Leblanc was replying in an interview to questions concerning the planned disruption of the seal hunt off the Newfoundland coast by the British Columbia-based Greenpeace Foundation.

He said the foundation's plan to spray seal pups with a red dye, making the fur commercially worthless, is hypothetical. A decision has yet to be taken on whether the hunt will take place this season, he said.

However, he added that overflights and interference with the seal hunt is forbidden under the seal protection regulations and the fisheries act.

New Bank for Prairies

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons Thursday gave approval-in-principle to the establishment of the Northland Bank, a new chartered bank to be sponsored by credit unions and co-operative societies in the three Prairie provinces.

The private bill, sponsored by Joe Guay (L-St. Boniface), was given all-party support in the Commons.

The bill now goes to the Commons finance committee for detailed study.

The bank, with its head office in Winnipeg, will assist in the economic growth of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, Guay said.

Authorized capital of the bank is $20 million and the initial capital subscription will be $10 million.

Commitments for 50 per cent of the amount have already been received, he said.

Gordon Ritchie (PC-Dauphin) said the bank will help end the domination of the West by eastern-based financial institutions.

It will help the West become more stable and self-reliant, he said.

Charles-Arthur Gauthier (SC—Roberval) said the new bank "is taking a step to free the government from the traditional chartered banks."

The owners of the new bank—Norbanque in French—will be the common people rather than big financiers, he said.

Executive offices of the bank will be in Calgary and branch offices will be opened in Regina and Edmonton, as well as Calgary and Winnipeg.

100,000 Immigrants a Year Eyed

OTTAWA (CP) — A special parliamentary committee tabled a report in the Commons Thursday saying Canada needs at least 100,000 immigrants a year to offset a declining birth rate.

But the committee of nine Senate and 16 Commons members shied away from a definite ceiling on newcomers. That was a government decision, the committee said.

However a draft of the report, leaked to some reporters last month, had suggested a limit of about one per cent of the population of 225,000 a year at the current level.

The final report, to be discussed by Parliament, likely will form the backbone of new immigration policy.

The committee rejected the view in some of the 1,200 submissions it received since starting work last March that Canada should close its doors to immigrants. It also concluded that an open-door policy is not the answer.

"The committee's preference is for a policy of moderation between these two extremes."

A major recommendation is that any new policy should encourage immigrants to settle in areas away from the major cities. Those willing to sign a two-year contract along these lines would jump to the front of waiting lists.

This proposal, which would be implemented only after talks with the provinces, brought immediate criticism from one of the committee members — David MacDonald, a United Church minister who is the Progressive Conservative MP for the Prince Edward Island Riding of Egmont.

MacDonald said the tone of the report is reflected in the way the committee quoted and agreed with the Newfoundland government's view that immigration "must be brought under control and rationally directed ... to best serve the interests of Canadians."

The major thrust of the report clearly is short-term and selfish, he added.

Four other committee members—Liberals Monique Begin and Peter Stollery and New Democrats David Orlikow and Andrew Brewin — joined MacDonald in stressing that the main report was not unanimous in every respect.

Martin O'Connell, co-chairman of the committee with Quebec Liberal Senator Maurice Riel, told reporters revised immigration policy should consider four main factors — family reunification, lack of discrimination, the state of the economy and accommodatin of refugees.

The latter, as well as immigrants sponsored by their immediate families resident in Canada, would not be part of the annual target recommended by the committee.

The Immigration Act contains no specific provisions for admission of refugees. The immigration minister, however, generally is free to admit refugees under special conditions — such as the Vietnam war, the military coup in Chile and the ouster of Asians from Uganda.

The committee wants a clear definition of a refugee that includes those living in their homeland but facing persecution or punishment for political reasons.

Suspend Parole, Wagner Urges

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative MP Claude Wagner called on the government Thursday to suspend all parole of prisoners for 90 days while Parliament considers new public safety legislation.

The former Quebec justice minister stated that the suspension would be made under the War Measures Act, if necessary.

Prime Minister Trudeau, however, rejected the suggestion. He said it would be "going a little far."

Wagner raised the parole issue in the Commons the day after Montreal Police shot and killed a 42-year-old parolee following a $20,000 extortion attempt.

The dead man, Claude Pitre, was let out on parole two months ago after serving 14 years of a 25-year sentence for armed robbery.

Wagner noted that the government is committed to bringing in a legislative "package" including a bill to abolish capital punishment entirely, and measures to tighten up parole procedures, gun laws and prison security.

He suggested that all parole should be suspended in Canada for 90 days to prevent further crimes by parolees while Parliament is considering the legislation.

Trudeau replied that he didn't know whether the government had the legal power to order the National Parole Board to suspend paroles as suggested by Wagner.

He also said such a move would not be in the interests of justice or humanitarian principles since it would apply to all cases without taking into account special circumstances.

Wagner argued that the government in the past has invoked the War Measures Act in emergency situations, and could do so again.

He said that although the move would interfere with the freedom of "certain citizens," the present practice is endangering the safety of all citizens of Canada.

Please think about
INFLATION

One of the major causes of inflation is the rapid growth in spending by all levels of government. This spending has multiplied five times in the past ten years. Policy makers can set an example by ensuring that governments, including our city council, live within their means and break away from the traditional approach of meeting expanding programmes by increasing taxes. Think about a man who understands economic controls. Please think about Bob Wright.

Bank Searching for Head Office

MONTREAL (CP) — The Bank of Montreal is still searching for a new head office but emphatically denies that search will result in a move to Toronto.

The bank also denies it plans to change its name to First Canadian Bank — a slogan now used on all bank stationery and strikingly similar to the name of its new Ontario headquarters in Toronto.

Such denials come in response to inquiries about locker room talk by bank industry officials that Canada's oldest bank wants to shift its nerve centre from St. James Street in Montreal — formerly the nucleus of Canadian finance — closer to the haunts of Toronto's Bay Street barons and undisputed pacesetters of Canada's economic affairs.

Stan Condor, chief of the Bank of Montreal's public relations department, is aware of the rumors and says he is surprised that he does not get queries at least every two weeks on them.

Rumors started running especially rampant last year when the bank withdrew from a huge CP Rail building project in downtown Montreal.

The project, covering a three-block area, was to house the bank's new national headquarters.

Harvie Walford, the bank's vice-president, said in February that "the terms of the lease offered by Canadian Pacific were not acceptable."

Meanwhile, Condor said the bank is still looking for a new national headquaters in Montreal.

Although it was not the bank's intention, Condor would not rule out the possibility the bank would construct its own building rather than rent premises in a new project.

The bank, however, is a partner in a huge project in downtown Toronto, called First Canadian Place, which will house the headquarters for the bank's Ontario operations.

The bank will rent nine storeys in the main tower and the major portion of a smaller building.

Ford Earnings Down

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. said consolidated earnings in the third quarter of 1975 were $29.4 million or $3.53 a share compared with $34.8 million or $4.19 a share in the 1974 period.

Consolidated results include the company's Canadian operations and those of its subsidiaries in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Singapore.

Earnings based on Canadian third-quarter results were $28.1 million, a decline of 14 per cent from $32.8 million in the third-quarter last year. President Roy Bennett said the profit decrease was attributable primarily to higher labor and material costs which were only partially recovered by price increases.

URANIUM ORE FOUND IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC (CP) — The discovery of uranium ore deposits in Quebec's Lake St. John area was announced Thursday by Come Carbonneau, president of the provincially-owned Quebec Mineral Economics and Development Corp.

The "promising" alkaline area found 180 miles north of here contains a mineralized zone about 12 miles long and several hundred feet in width, Carbonneau said. This zone contains radioactive vertical bands up to three feet thick, he said.

Analysis of 23 samples taken from the most radioactive bands in the deposit showed an average of 1½ pounds of uranium a ton, he said. Also present in the samples were other minerals such as tantalum and zirconium.

In September and October, the development corporation staked about 28 exclusive claims in this region, he said, adding that in 1968 deposits of nobium were discovered in the same area.

Other companies are being sought to develop the uranium deposit, Carbonneau said. In Quebec, a deposit generally needs to have a value of more than $20 million to warrant development he said, but he could not place a value on the newly-discovered deposit.

business

Burns Foods

Burns Foods Ltd. of Calgary, Canada's second-largest meat packer, has reported unaudited net earnings of $1,704,601 or 63 cents per share for the first nine months of 1975, down from the earnings of $2,526,587 or 94 cents for the same period last year.

Company president Arthur Child attributes the 34.5-per-cent decline in earnings—despite a 3.8-per-cent increase in sales to $452.6 million—to rising costs, surplus plant capacity in Alberta and a drastic reduction in hog production.

"No doubt it will surprise the public that the industry can incur losses when meat prices are very high," Child said in his report to shareholders, but added that "unsatisfactory results continue in meat-packing operations."

"The possible effect of the federal government's anti-inflation program on the earnings of the company is not yet known. In any case the industry has no control over prices which are largely determined by the supply of raw materials coming from the farm sector, which is not subject to price controls."

Hooker

Hooker Chemicals (Nanaimo) Ltd., a subsidiary of Canadian Occidental Petroleum Ltd., has purchased the sodium chlorate manufacturing plant at Squamish, B.C., formerly owned by Squamish Chemicals Ltd.

The purchase, for approximately $2 million, was effective Nov. 1.

The plant was built in 1972, and has the capacity to produce 10,000 tons per year. The sodium chlorate is sold to two major pulp mill customers in B.C. under long-term contracts.

The plant will be operated as part of the company's Hooker Chemicals Division in North Vancouver.

Lockheed Aircraft

Lockheed Aircraft Corp. has reported sharply higher earnings for the third quarter of 1975 compared with last year.

The company said it earned $1.06 a share this year, against 54 cents a share last year. For the first nine months, its earnings were $3.18 a share against $1.63 a share for the same period last year.

Lockheed said the higher profits came despite rising losses on its L-1011 Tristar, Lockheed's version of the Jumbo Jet.

The company said it lost $52 million in the first nine months of 1975 on the Tristar program—up from a $39-million loss on the plane in the same period last year.

The company said its current earnings are based on expectations that it will sell 300 Tristars, although only 117 have been delivered so far, with 37 firm orders in backlog. It said small down payments had been made on 51 more Tristars.

70% of City Hall Complaints on Taxes

Seventy per cent of complaints to city hall are residents protesting they are being priced right out of their homes, Mayor Peter Pollen said Thursday.

Pollen said municipal governments are the sounding boards for complaints and he urged Greater Victoria educators to place price tag limits on their aspirations.

"There's a finite source of revenue and we must recognize we are getting less and less wealthy," he told a meeting at Camosun College which was called to assess how educators could reduce duplication of offerings in adult education.

Chairman of the meeting, Dr. Hal Knight, said Camosun College had commissioned a study into adult education and preliminary findings indicated some 88 agencies are involved in the same work in Greater Victoria.

He invited representatives of the Greater Victoria library board, school boards, University of Victoria and municipal governments to meet and explore the possibility of more co-operation.

Pollen said there was too much emphasis on leisure activities. Adults are being taught how to "pack a canoe when there isn't enough money spent on vocational training. There's too much money spent on frills. The trend is incredible," said the mayor.

"We must work as a community to recognize how much money we've got and recognize that limit. A tyranny of naivety is the cause (of people being taxed out of their homes), not socialism or capitalism."

Representatives passed a motion, iniated by school board superintendent Jake Longmore, that agencies represented recognize the merit of co-ordinating library, recreation and education services for adults.

POLICE COMPLAINT PLAN WORKING

VANCOUVER (CP) — The chairman of the British Columbia Police Commission says a system instituted last spring to settle disputes between citizens and police is working almost 100 per cent.

John Hogarth said hundreds of complaints have been handled under the new system with complete satisfaction to both sides.

In the past, differences between police officers and members of the public were handled by written submissions. Under the new plan, the participants are brought together for what is termed "a peace meeting."

Civil Service Pay Boosts 'Cause of B.C. Labor Ill'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gordon Gibson, leader of the British Columbia Liberal Party, said Thursday that high settlements awarded by the NDP government to civil servants had contributed to subsequent strikes in the private sector.

"Settlements in the public sector should follow those in the private sector, not lead them," said Gibson in an interview with radio open-line show host Jack Webster.

The Liberal leader said that while there had been a need for catch-up in some public sector jobs, the awards by the government had gone "far beyond catchup."

"It was this leadership that fuelled the fires of inflation in B.C. and made necessary the back-to-work order and the freeze," he continued.

Gibson said the "unholy alliance" between labor and the NDP government had worked out very badly for both groups.

Gibson accused labor of trying to undermine the new pay guidelines.

"Ie's not the rank and file of labor — not by a long shot," he said. "This is very clear when you look what happened in the rank and file reaction to Bill 146 (the Collective Bargaining Continuation Act passed by the legislature last month, which ordered thousands of strikers in the forest, food and other industries back to their jobs while negotiations continue).

"The men didn't just obey the law — they gladly obeyed the law. And they told their union leaders to damn-well obey the law," Gibson said.

"The situation where labor leadership in B.C. is asking their men to hit the bricks for political reasons has been a disgraceful part of our labor relations," he said.

During the 90-minute interview, Gibson blamed British immigrant union leaders for much of the labor unrest in the province.

He said: "We have far too much of the so-called political unionism imported here from Britian ... (British labor leaders) bring along this idea that the job of labor is to overthrow the political system and society."

They feel that is the "only way you can get justice for your workers," he said.

The North American concept of business unions, he continued, is "Go out and get more for your men from the company."

Also during the interview, Gibson issued a challenge to leaders of the three other parties to join him in a televised debate.

Gibson said his party has 7,500 "genuinely paid-up members" in B.C., but does not have the backing of either "big business or big unions."

He said that a series of recent Social Credit meetings throughout the north attracted only about 10 per cent of the claimed membership in those areas.

VOTE-SPLIT 'MYTH' RAPPED BY WALLACE

OSOYOOS (CP) — Conservative leader Dr. Scott Wallace called on party members Thursday to "get rid of the myth that supporting Conservative candidates will only split the vote."

"I'm sick and tired of such rubbish from those who feel they have a claim on every voter who is not a socialist," he said.

He called the tactics undemocratic and manipulative.

"If the next B.C. legislature has only Socred and NDP members, it will guarantee the return of socialism to B.C.," he warned.

Wallace spoke to an audience of 25 at the Conservative's Boundary-Similkameen constituency association nominating meeting. Barry Montgomery, 30, a Grand Forks businessman, became the candidate by acelamation.

Bennett Plans Ready

VANCOUVER (CP) — Social Credit leader Bill Bennett said Thursday his itinerary has been set right up to election day, Dec. 11.

Bennett said, however, he cannot announce the majority of it yet because candidates have not been nominated in most of the ridings he will visit and halls have not been booked.

He will be in Victoria today for a caucus meeting of all Social Credit MLAs and in Kelowna next Wednesday for his own nomination meeting. He will speak tonight at a Saanich nominating meeting at Holyrood House, Bay and Blanshard.

VANDER ZALM SEEKS SEAT

SURREY (CP) — Mayor Bill Vander Zalm announced Thursday that he will seek the Social Credit party nomination for the Surrey seat now held by provincial secretary Ernie Hall.

He joins Carole Kerr in the quest for the nomination, which is to be decided tonight.

Pair Stole Crabs

WHITE ROCK (CP) — Two residents of this community south of Vancouver were convicted Thursday of stealing crabs from a fisherman's crab trap.

Norman Black, a British Columbia fisheries officer who laid the charge, said it is believed to be the first such case in Canada.

William Coyne, 20, and Jan Scarlet, 20, had pleaded not guilty. Coyne was granted a discharge on the condition he undertake a 40-hour community project and complete it by February. Miss Scarlet was given an absolute discharge.

Black testified that he and an RCMP officer were cruising in Boundary Bay off White Rock in July when they saw the pair lifting crab traps and stealing crabs.

Coyne and Scarlet told the court that the crown had not proved they were in Canadian water at the time of the offence.

They also said the crown had no crabs as evidence since there were none in their boat when they were charged.

Dress Issue Skirted

VANCOUVER (CP) — All women employees of the Law Society of British Columbia returned to work Thursday — in skirts — after several quit Wednesday to protest the disciplining of one who wore pants to the office.

The women employees refused to comment or be photographed in the office, and society treasurer Hugh Legg said the society's exclusive members (benchers) was considering whether to set dress standards for the women, but would not comment any further.

Asked for her comments on the situation, Provincial Judge Nancy Morrison said she was surprised that the pants issue was still troubling the legal profession in 1975.

"But I suppose it's all right for the men to set dress regulations for women on the understanding that the women will be able to say what the men will wear," she said.

The incident recalled Judge Morrison's own problems with pants in 1971. Then a crown prosecutor, one of her supervisors told her she should not wear a pantsuit for court appearances.

SHIP PICKET

VANCOUVER (CP) — More than 30 Filipino and Indonesian seamen walked off their ship at the Canadian Pacific Railway docks Wednesday and threw up a picket line to support their demands for more money. The vessel was unloading plywood and steel at the time.

Bad News for Canada in Ottawa Oil Report

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — The latest National Energy Board crude oil report has more bad news for Eastern Canada and in particular Ontario than it does for the United States.

According to government sources, this even gloomier second annual NEB report scheduled to be made public later this month predicts that within a short six years Canada will have to start importing large amounts of crude oil into the Ontario market which has been more than adequately supplied with domestic oil from Alberta.

The implications of this for Canada are much grtver than the implications of the 1980-81 termination of Canada crude oil exports are to the United States, government sources say.

This will mean increased dependence on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

It will also require that the as-yet-unfinished Montreal-Sarnia crude oil pipeline backed by federal governmen tdeficiency guarantees will have to be reversed much sooner than anyone in government and industry had expected.

This could, in turn, force the government to buy the pipeline and to back another pipeline project to bring more imported crude oil into Montreal, to start supplying the Tornto-Sarnia markets.

More important, it will result in even larger deficits in Canada's oil accounts, since domestic demand will be continuing to rise, by all expectations in the oil report, even as oil exports are being phased out two and one-half years sooner than predicted last fall.

Consquently, there will be inereased pressures within the federal government to increase the domestic oil price, and along with it the domestic natural gas price, to near or the same as world levels.

Otherwise, the cost of the federal imported oil subsidy, designed to keep all Canadian oil prices below the world oil price level, will cause chaos with federal finances.

At present, the government has already had to tap two revenue sources, the crude oil export charge and a special federal gasoline excise tax, to try to cover most, but not all, of the federal import subsidy costs.

With declining export charge revenues, general tax revenues will also have to be used if the domestic oil price isn't increased substantially to lower the differential which must be paid for by the import subsidy program.

Westcoast Puts Exports First

OTTAWA (FP) — Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. of Vancouver will continue to refuse to sign any new contracts for extra gas deliviers to British Columbia customers as long as it is unable to meet all of its current gas export commitments according to Westcoast President E. C. Phillips.

The only thing that could change the company's stance would be an order from the National Energy Board for Westcoast to reduce even more the already-cutback export deliveries to the U.S. Pacific Northwest so that growing domestic needs could be met, Phillips told the Mackenzie Valley natural gas pipeline hearings here Thursday.

The controversy about export commitments versus domestic needs served by the Westcoast pipeline system arose when Phillips confirmed his company's intention to use most of any gas obtained by Westcoast from the Mackenzie Delta-Beaufort Sea area to make-up shortfalls in export deliveries.

With winter exports running an average of 300 million cubic feet a day below the contract level of almost 810 million cubic feet a day, Westcoast says that in the first year of Mackenzie Valley pipeline deliveries it hopes to acquire some 230 million cubic feet a day.

The bulk of this would go to the export market, to make up deficiencies, he said.

Ultimately, Westcoast hopes to obtain 50 million cubic feet a day from the western Arctic.

SASK. BOOZE TRICKLE

REGINA (CP) — As the Saskatchewan Liquor Board continues to lose about $150,000 in revenue daily and the province's liquor, wine and beer runs out, a spokesman for 300 striking board employees cautioned residents Thursday against getting their hopes too high for a settlement.

Harvey Linnen, information officer for the Saskatchewan Government Employees' Association, said statements from both union and liquor board spokesman that bargaining is going well might be leaving an overly-optimistic impression.

The two sides were far apart in wage proposals one week ago with the union proposing a $295-a-month increase for all liquor board employees to be phased in during four steps. The board's last public offer was an eight-per-cent increase plus $88 a month for some employees and eight per cent plus $94 a month for others. The employees, who make an average monthly salary of about $800, have been on strike for five weeks.

The flow of beer has been reduced to a trickle in many centres and is expected to be completely dried up by the weekend. Many Regina hotels are no longer selling beer for home consumption.

With liquor board stores closed since the strike began, the union escalated its action this week by setting up pickets outside the provinces' five breweries and eight warehouses where beer and bottles are stored.

High-Mercury Indians 'Healthy'

MONTREAL (CP) — Doctors at the Montreal Neurological Institute (MNI) who last week examined three Matagami Cree Indians with the highest mercury blood levels ever recorded in Quebec said Thursday the three are "perfectly healthy."

Drs. Andrew Eisen and Allan Sherwin said four days of tests on the three — whose mercury blood levels last July were higher than those which killed 100 people and crippled another 800 in Minamata, Japan — uncovered "no neurological sign of mercury or any other disease."

The two doctors also denied charges the three were flown out of Montreal ahead of schedule last week to prevent a Japanese expert from examining them for symptoms of the disease, known as Minamata-Dryden.

A member of the Grand Cree Council charged the three Indians were flown home last Friday afternoon before they could be examined Saturday by Dr. Takeu Ghi, who arrived in Montreal Friday evening.

"All they had to do was contact one of us," Dr. Eisen said. "To this day we have not heard from them.

"We would have welcomed Japanese doctors," Dr. Sherwin added.

Last July, Joseph, Eva and Andrew Ottereyes had mercury blood levels of more than 500 parts per billion — more than five times the 100 parts per billion considered permissible by the federal department of health and welfare.

The Japanese have had 20 years' experience with the disease, which causes paralysis and death and is incurable.

One cause of the disease is eating mercury-contaminated fish, which the Ottereyes family ate twice and sometimes three times a day until they were warned of the danger last July.

By the end of September, their mercury blood levels had dropped by more than half to under 300 parts per billion for the two men and 117.6 for Eva Ottereyes.

Results from last week's blood tests won't be available for about five weeks, but the two doctors guess the levels are even lower now.

FOUR MEN CHARGED IN PROMOTER 'THREAT'

TORONTO (CP) — Four men, two from Montreal, have been charged with conspiracy to obtain $300,000 in payment for putting an end to threats against two Toronto stock promoters, RCMP said Thursday.

Charged are Vic Cotroni, 64, and Paolo Violi, 43, both of Montreal, and Sheldon Swartz, 43, of Toronto and John Papalia, 51, of Hamilton.

The charges were laid as a result of an investigation by the RCMP commercial crime section, Metropolitan Toronto police and the Montreal urban police department, the RCMP said in a news release.

RCMP said the men were charged in connection with alleged threats against the two stock promoters and a payment of $300,000 to remove the threats. The offence is alleged to have taken place in Montreal and Toronto between April, 1973, and May, 1974.

Nurses Unhappy With 44% Offer

MONTREAL (CP) — Negotiators for 15,000 Quebec nurses said Thursday that new government wage offers are something to bargain with, and they discounted any further possibility of a nurses' strike.

The Quebec social affairs department announced earlier Thursday that nurses would get a 44.38-per-cent wage increase in the first year of a three-year contract. The nurses, without a contract since June, had wanted a 60-per-cent increase to bring them in line with their Ontario counterparts.

Francois Charbonneau, chief negotiator for the 7,000-member United Nurses Federation, said the union intends to start serious bargaining for the common front of nurses.

"Pressure tactics and any work stoppages have been discontinued so real negotiations can begin. Work schedules will return to normal."

In addition to a 44.38-per-cent increase in the first year of a three-year contract, the nurses would get eight per cent the second year and six per cent in the final year.

Under terms of the government offer, first-year nurses would earn $201 a week, up from $136. Nurses with 12 or more years of service would get $291 a week.

These figures include a 17-per-cent cost-of-living bonus awarded in July for 1974-75 but which was not integrated into salaries.

At a general assembly called following the government offers, about 850 nurses voted to give union negotiators a mandate to bargain the whole contract and set their own priorities rather than concentrate only on the monetary issue.

"We have not, however, lowered our demands. Our July 10 request for a first-level salary of $247 a week and a top level of $338 weekly still stands," Charbonneau said.

Various pressure tactics were used by nurses in Montreal-area hospitals during the last two months to get the government moving on wage offers.

Latest measures included a work-to-rule campaign which involved refusal to attend to duties not specified in their contract, such as making beds and passing out meal trays.

U.S. Prices Soar

WASHINGTON (WP) — sharp increases in the prices of steel products and automobiles sent the wholesale price index soaring in October at its fastest one-month clip since October, 1974, the U.S. government reported Thursday.

The big increase worries policy makers, who are counting on some respite from serious inflation problems to aid the economic recovery.

White House press secretary Ron Nessen said the 1.3 per cent rise in the labor Department's wholesale index for October is "certainly a reminder that inflation is something that can by no means be ignored."

Besides a stiff increase in prices of industrial commodities like steel, lumber and chemicals, U.S. inflation woes were compounded by a stubborn refusal of farm products cost to decline.

Labor department analysts said that the prices of farm products normally fall sharply between September and October, but last month they did not. As a result, the labor department reported a seasonally-adjusted 2.2 per cent increase in the price of farm products, following a 4.3 per cent rise in September.

Economists, however, tend to focus more carefully on changes in industrial commodities prices than food prices because industrial prices are less volatile and have a more permanent impact on the overall price level.

MORE TALKS FOR POST

WASHINGTON (WP) — Local 26 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, representing 24 electricians at The Washington Post, has tentatively scheduled a negotiating session with The Post and federal mediators for next Tuesday, officials of the union and the newspaper said Thursday.

This session could represent a breakthrough in the current strike against The Post. It will be the first serious negotiating since early last month between the paper and a union other than the pressmen's.

8 Million Illegal Aliens

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Immigration and Naturalization Service Thursday made public the preliminary results of a study indicating that there are 8 million illegal aliens—5 million from Mexico and 3 million from other countries—in the United States.

This is the estimate of a report prepared for the immigration service by Lesko Associates, a Washington management consultant firm. It represents the first part of a massive study commissioned by the service to obtain more accurate information about the size and effects of the illegal immigrant influx.

$4.50 Minimum Pay Demanded by Fed

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Federation of Labor Thursday called on the provincial government to raise the minimum wage to $4.50 an hour.

The hourly minimum wage currently is $2.50 an hour and will be raised in two steps to $3 by June 1, 1976.

In other money-related resolutions, delegates to the federation's 30th annual convention voted to press the federal government to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a substantial increase in the deduction for all work-related expenses, exemption for family allowance, and increased personal exemptions to $4,000 for an individual, $4,000 for dependent spouse and $2,000 each for all other dependents.

The convention also went on record as opposing establishment of full-time Unemployment Insurance Commission boards of referees, which would hear appeals on UIC disqualifications.

Present boards are composed of one person nominated by local labor councils, one person nominated by employer organizations and a chairman, all who serve on a per diem basis.

Delegates feared the full-time boards would become similar to arbitration boards and an "unwielding rubber stamp for the insurance officers."

Delegates also urged the provincial government to bring B.C. Telephone Co. under public ownership and control citing poor service, high rates and current control from outside Canada.

Members of the B.C. Government Employees Union attempted to have the federation delegates back a resolution that the "hot" edict, now on about 100 liquor labels, be restricted in its application to "only those circumstances where it can be effectively applied."

Delegates said they were not against the hot edict, under which union members refuse to handle products, but said there were times when they were confused by when a product was hot and when it wasn't.

The resolution was turned down but delegates did call on the Canadian Labor Congress to implement an immediate national boycott against Seagram's.

Keith Sheady of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union was critical of the CLC and an affiliated union — the Distillery Rectifying Wine and Allied Workers — for not supporting his union's battle.

The union has been on strike against Seagram's operation in nearby New Westminster for more than nine months. The dispute centres around the closure of the distillery's bottling operation.

Delegates also turned down a resolution which would have urged the B.C. government to allow beer, ale and wines sales through small grocery stores.

The convention voted against the motion after BCGEU delegates said it would mean that products handled by union employees of the B.C. Liquor Control Board would be turned over to non-union people.

Curling Rink Opening

The $1 million curling rink, part of the Juan de Fuca recreation complex on the Island Highway, will be officially opened Saturday at 2 p.m.

Recreation Minister Jack Radford will do the honors, with the public in Colwood, Langford and Metchosin invited to attend the brief ceremony and later take advantage of guided tours.

The curling rink, which has eight sheets, has been in use in recent weeks. It was to have opened in the spring but construction was delayed by labor disputes.

The provincial government contributed one-third of the cost of the project. The balance will be paid by regional ratepayers through long-term borrowing.

4 SEEK 2 TRUST SEATS

There are two candidates for each of two seats on the Islands Trust, to be filled by by-elections held in conjunction with municipal elections Nov. 15.

On North Pender Island, David Auchterlonie, a contractor and Gordon Wallace, a business manager, are vying for the seat left vacant by the death earlier this year of trustee Walter Cunliffe.

And on Mayne Island, Garnet Coburn, designer and builder, and Mrs. Isabel Geehan, businesswoman, are candidates for the seat of trustee Christian Bergthorson, who resigned the post after moving away.

Ray McManaman, assistant secretary-treasurer for the Capital Regional Board, said holding the byelection in conjunction with municipal and regional elections allows the use of already established polling places.

Drug Accused Bugged, Prosecutor Indicates

Electronic bugging was used in an investigation which led to the arrest of four men on drug charges last month, prosecutor Mike Hutchison said in provincial court Thursday.

Hutchison, speaking during a bail hearing for David Yosha Robinson, 38, of 5023 Old West Saanich Road, said "evidence will show surveillance, both physical and electronic was carried out."

The four accused have been charged with conspiring to traffic in pethidine in Victoria County between Sept. 1 and Oct. 19.

Hutchison told Judge William Ostler the case involved "narcotics apparently stolen from a number of drugstores in the Greater Victoria area."

Outside court Hutchinson indicated a room in the Malahat Mountain Motel, Malahat Drive, had been bugged by drug squad officers.

It is the second such case involving electronic bugging that has come before provinial court. The first, heard in Auust, led to the conviction of two men charged with conspiring to commit armed robbery.

Ostler refused bail for Robertson and ordered his detention to next Thursday for election of trial method and plea.

Charged with Robertson are David Michael Henderson, 22, no fixed address; William Paul Murray 27, and Donald William Thomson, 42, both listing their address as the Malahat Mountain Motel.

Murray and Thomson also face a separate charge containing counts of conspiracy to traffic in codeine, morphine and pethidine, conspiracy to possess each of the drugs for trafficking and possession of the drugs for that purpose.

Henderson also faces a charge of trafficking in pethidine.

All charges allege the offences took place between Sept. 1 and Oct. 19.

Murray and Thomson were remanded in custody to next Thursday for bail application. Henderson is in jail on other matters

$1.5M Hike In Grant To UNICEF

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — Canada announced Thursday a $1.5-Million increase in its annual contribution to the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund to help provide basic necessities for children and their mothers in developing countries.

Monique Begin, parliamentary secretary to External Affairs Minister Allan Maceachen, told the annual UN pledging conference that this boosts the Canadian contribution to $5 million.

In addition, she said, the Canadian government recently advised UNICEF that it is contributing $2 million — $1 million in cash and $1 million in products — in the current fiscal year to support special assistance projects for children in countries most seriously affected by world economic conditions.

Mini-Buses Urged As Alternative To 'Alligator'

Taxpayers can go on "feeding the alligator" by providing more off-street parking, or they can keep up the pressure until mini-bus service kills the appetite, Oak Bay Ald. Doug McLelland said today.

He was commenting on complaints of parking congestion at Oak Bay Senior Citzens centre discussed by works committee Thursday.

Conceding the problem was not a matter of high priority, McLelland said it is linked to a growing regional complaint that points up the need for an alternative.

"You can go on feeding the alligator by building more parking lots; the other is to balance off the use of the automobile."

He said mini-buses serving short-run needs of citizens are "the only solution to accumulation of traffic."

Another alternative for the immediate problem was put forward by Ald. Doug Watts, who suggested Monterey Street could be widened to allow for more curbside parking near the centre.

The committee also discussed a proposed north-south route for the Oak Bay portion of a proposed regional bikeway, making use of Henderson Road south of Cedar Hill Cross Road.

Because Henderson already bears heavy motor traffic to and from the university and the residential areas of Cadboro Bay, Ten Mile Point and Gordon Head, the committee felt it could not recommend to council that part of the street be set aside for bikes.

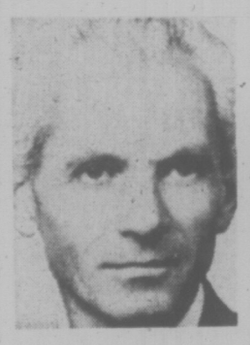
Regional bikeway advisory committee had recommended lines be painted on the roadway to designate the bike route.

But McLelland said this would only be tokenism in view of the volume of traffic.

"We could call it a bikeway, but it wouldn't be a bikeway," he said.

The subject was tabled until further discussion with the regional committee.

McLelland said alternative routes through Oak Bay will be welcomed, provided heavy capital outlay is not required.



FRENCH AUTHOR and professor of literature Jean Onimus will be giving a lecture on the Theatre of the Absurd 7:30 p.m. Nov. 12 at the Windsor Park Pavilion.

HIGHLANDS LIKE WINDING ROADS

Preserving the winding roads in the Highlands district and leaving gravel roads and unmaintained roads untouched were the major recommendations of the report by the Highlands District Community Association.

Association chairman Frank Spellacy said at a public meeting Thursday at Millstream elementary school that Highlands residents want to keep the country character of their district and the provincial highways department can help.

The meeting, organized by the highways department, came more than a year after it was promised following a sit-in on highways equipment doing maintenance work in the Highlands.

Other recommendations called for allowing vegetation to grow back to the roadside where it wouldn't interfere with services and preservation of trees. Maximum speed limit would be 25 miles an hour.

Jack Lisman of the highways department confirmed that his department has no major proposals for road extensions or upgrading in the Highlands.

'Wonder' Dental Drug Called Toxic

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has allowed an estimated 30,000 dentists — about one-quarter of the country's total — to treat millions of decayed teeth with a toxic "wonder" drug that has never met the government's requirements for safety and efficacy, the agency's top overseer in the House has charged.

Rep. L. H. Fountain (Dem. —N.C.) and three expert witnesses also charged that the FDA has allowed the drug to be shipped illegally across state lines for 13 years, has done nearly nothing to defer its use, and has told a long-protesting specialist that perhaps only "political pressure" would bring action.

In addition to being formulated in at least 25 different ways, the drug contains poisons — including lead and embalming fluid — that can reach into vital organs and bone marrow, the witnesses told the house intergovernmental relations subcommittee. The drug also contains anti-inflammatory agents that prevents wounds from healing, they said.

The Air Force and Army have not authorized their dentists to use the drug, a paste which bears names such as N-2 and RC-2B.

The state of California forbids its manufacture, distribution or use. Nebraska health authorities have cautioned every dentist in the state. Australia, Norway and Sweden have banned it.

The dental procedure involved is root-canal therapy, in which a dentist tries to save a tooth by removing the pulp and filling the empty space. Traditionally, specialists, called endodontists, use a method that is conservative and safe — but expensive. Over the past 25 or 30 years dentists, especially general practitioners, have adopted a heavily promoted "simplified" technique — devised by Swiss dentist Angelo Sargenti — that is quick and relatively inexpensive.

In Victoria, Dr. John Zaparinuk, president of the Victoria Dental Society, said N-2 is known to all dentists and specialists in root canal work generally do not use it.

Another dental source said it has been around locally for quite a number of years and has been used but dismissed by many dentists because it did not yield sufficiently good results.

N-2 and the technique involved using it essentially aims at a single treatment, rather than the series of treatments to sterilize a root canal before it is finally plugged with a filler.

Sources said the Canadian Dental Association has never banned the Sargenti method but because of "misgivings" neither has it endorsed it.

In 1969, U.S. dentists using the Sargenti method formed the American Endodontic Society (AES), of which Dr. Ramon Werts, of Fullerton, Calif., is executive director. The AES has "no requirement for membership," Werts testified.

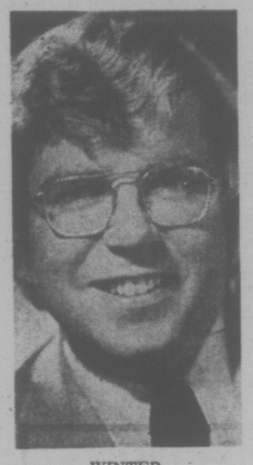
Endodontists Howard Martin of Georgetown University, Stephen Cohn of the University of the Pacific, and Dudley Grich of the University of Southern California testified that the Sargenti method is unsafe. Werts insisted it is safe.

Sargenti and the AES, in their own literature, have claimed lead to be "beneficial" in "proper concentrations," counted favorable results from a study with one dog while dismissing unfavorable studies with many animals, and proclaimed man to be "the highest experimental animal," the critics testified. Martin testified that he had tried for months to get the FDA to act. After an agency official suggested "political pressure," he testified, he contacted his congressman, Rep Gilbert Gude (R—Md.), who, after inquiries, appealed to the FDA a month ago to ban the drug.

UN SHARE BOOSTED

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — A $4.5-million increase in Canada's 1975 contribution to the United Nations Development program was announced Wednesday by Monique Begin, parliamentary secretary to External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen.

The increase brings the Canadian contribution to $24.5 million, approximately six per cent of the total contribution of all countries participating in the program. Funds are used for development programs among the poorer countries.



WINTER

Winter Mission Opens

Protestant churches in Greater Victoria have put up $24,000 of the $34,000 expenses and advertising budget to bring the Terry Winter mission to Metropolitan United Church for 10 days starting today.

Advance publicist Bill Stephens said a dozen denominations representing more than 35 churches are taking part in the Christian mission expected to involve more than 1,200 individuals.

Church budgets have been the source of the expense money initially, but the respective donations will be made up by members of individual congregations, it is hoped.

If participation exceeds the seating capacity of Metropolitan United, the overflow will be accommodated at First United. And if response is greater than that, arrangements to use Memorial Arena are being considered for the final night of the crusade.

Stephens said Vancouver-based Winter — of Terry Winter Evangelistic Association — will get no salary from the money pledged by individuals and churches. Instead, a collection to the Winter foundation will be taken on the two final nights of the mission, and Winter draws his salary from that.

Winter is a native of B.C. who spent his high school years in Nanaimo, graduating in 1960. He obtained an arts degree at University of B.C. and took theological training from 1964-68 at Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasedena, Calif.

In 1965 he served with the Billy Graham staff in crusades in B.C. and in 1970 formed his own evangelistic association.

What Comes Down Makes Ponds Go Up

We got trouble, right here in River City, what with pelting rains and gusty winds which blow all those leaves down to plug the storm drains. Sharon Garrett, 12, going about her patrol duties on Craigflower Road by Victoria West elementary school, shows the sort of problems which inevitably follow. Fact is, of course, that no boy on a bike could resist zipping through that pond and, with more rain to come over the weekend, many of them undoubtedly will.

Pile of Problems In Wake of Storm

A stack of problems was left in the wake of a storm that battered B.C. Thursday with lightning, thunder, hail, rain and gale-force winds that peaked at 70 miles per hour.

Ferry service to the Gulf Islands was wiped out. Other sailings were delayed. The thunder caused damage to three Colwood homes. Two school children received minor shocks.

A freighter in the storm-tossed Strait of Juan de Fuca lost part of her cargo and had to make her way back to Ogden Point.

While the situation eased today, a weather spokesman said there is still a risk of more thunder and lightning this evening.

Lightning blasts in Colwood damaged three homes on Walfred.

Hardest hit was the new home of Barry Casson at 895 Walfred. A bolt hit a tree 20 feet from the house, blowing out the double front door, shattering windows and cracking concrete. Damage is estimated at "a conservative $5,000."

The home next door of Sam McCleve, at 891 Walfred, had all its top floor windows shattered. The electrical system and top floor were damaged. The electrical system of a camper parked outside was damaged and the camper's door and windows were blown out.

Police report the chimney was struck by a lightning bolt.

The Angus Cornell home at 887 Walfred had three windows broken by the blast.

Two students at Spectrum school received mild shocks when a bolt struck the school, hitting the transformer and knocking out power for a brief period.

The students were leaning on a radiator when the bolt hit. A school spokesman said one suffered a slight burn to his wrist and the other a sore arm.

The Liberian freighter Pacific Glory escaped damage when "a few thousand feet of lumber," stacked on her deck, was lost in the wind-whipped Strait. She put in at Ogden Point without incident.

The Gulf Islands were without ferry service until late afternoon, the high winds and seas making navigation difficult and docking and loading impossible.

Sailings were delayed on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run because of docking problems on the mainland.

Aggravating the situation, the Queen of Victoria was only able to operate three of her four engines because of mechanical problems. She arrived at Swartz Bay for her scheduled 5 p.m. sailing 90 minutes late.

A B.C. Ferries' spokesman said extra late sailings were ordered to ease the situation.

"There was o real traffic jam," he said.

"There was no real traffic caused by downed tree limbs but an outage at Gordon Head from 1 to 3:30 p.m. could not be blamed on the storm. It was a scheduled interruption to allow B.C. Hydro to convert a distribution system from 12.5 kv to 25 kv.

Upper Vancouver Island and the west coast were hit even harder.

In Nanaimo, a house at 1228 Stewart Avenue, slid free from its foundation, ending up in the waters of Newcastle Channel on the city's waterfront, a distance of 12 feet. It was unoccupied at the time.

OAK BAY SOCREDS PICK CAR DEALER

Goal: 'Straighten Out This Mess'

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Businessman Frank Carson won the nomination in Oak Bay Thursday in B.C.'s first Social Credit nominating convention since the provincial election was called.

It was a triumph for business as the 46-year-old car dealer defeated long-time Oak Bay alderman and lawyer John Goult.

More than 1,000 Socreds crowded into Oak Bay Junior High School's auditorium and cafeteria and 624 official delegates took part in the vote. Final results were kept secret but one official said the count was close despite the obviously large Carson contingent.

A Socred member for four years, Carson emphasized in his speech what he called "the wasteful, unthinking extravagance of the Barret tsocialists."

"I believe we need less government in business — and more business in government. That way the people win," he said.

"I want to do my part to straighten out this mess — I don't profess to have all the answers, but I do believe it can be solved with a common-sense businesslike approach."

Carson stressed he wasn't running against incumbent Conservative MLA Scott Wallace. His fight is with the NDP government.

Gault gave a strong anti-NDP speech and talked of ridding the province of "the socialist viper at its throat."

A Socred member for just five months, he had more fire for Wallace who he called "Barrett's political friend" and said the Tory leader must be defeated to show that the Conservatives are not viable in B.C.

CARSON
. . . NDP 'wasteful'

Barrett wants Wallace to survive to continue to split the freedom vote in B.C., he said.

New Socred party leader Peter Hyndman chaired the meeting and told delegates the eyes of the party were on them because it was the first Socred nomination meeting since the Dec. 11 election was announced last Monday.

But it was obvious the delegates felt they were important because of Wallace and the desire to show Social Credit as the only workable free enterprise party in the province.

The crowd was mainly well-dressed business and professional men with their wives. Most were middle-aged or older and there were mostly familiar Oak Bay faces in the crowd.

They listened to Fred Usher and his band play old favorites.

When Hyndman announced Carson's victory, they were jubilant, and when asked how many would come out and work, almost every hand went up in unison.

Howie McDairmid, a former Socred MLA from Alberni who ran unsuccessfully for the Socreds in Oak Bay in 1972, called for 1,000 lawn signs through the constituency.

An army of lawn signs, he said, will prove Wallace is in trouble in Oak Bay and the Tories are not viable.

McDiarmid explained later that he took over as constituency president a year ago when membership stood at 250. Now its 1,200.

The organization is in good shape, he said, and it was clear Carson had been a major factor, working hard to sign up members and ensure support in his bid.

Pollen Backs SC, Won't Run

But in denying strong rumors of his candidacy today, at what he said would be his last press conference as mayor, Pollen made a strong pitch for B.C. electors to support the Social Credit party, "with all its limitations."

"I believe very, very sincerely that the provincial government we presently have is so demonstrably incompetent, so demonstrably political—and I say that in the most derogatory manner I possibly can—in the execution of the business of this province, that it is urgent the electors of this province and specifically this community overwhelmingly elect the Social Credit Party, with all its limitations," he said.

Pollen confirmed persistent speculation by admitting that he had closely considered running as a candidate himself, after discussions with Ald. Sam Bawlf, a declared candidate for the Socred nomination in Victoria.

He said he had spent the past week reviewing the possibility and all its implications. "However, reason finally prevailed after much thought and I am in no way interested in participation in this provincial election."

The mayor said he was no more endorsing Bawlf's bid for the nomination than he had endorsed any particular candidate in the civic election, but he did say Victoria could have better representation than it has received from incumbent Socred MLA Newell Morrision.

"I think he (Morrison) has been most inadequate and has done virtually nothing for the city of Victoria," he added.

Pollen described Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson, who are seeking the NDP nomination in Victoria, as "overwhelmingly unqualified" to serve in the legislature, and said a vote for either would be a vote for "institutionalizing the bureaucracy" of the province.

Both are "civil servants," he said, and in an obvious reference to Barber commented that one of them has "lived on governmental handouts throughout his young life . . . albeit he is a very bright young man."

In explaining his belief that it's crucial to replace the NDP government, Pollen noted the forest industry is in a loss position, the mining industry has "gone all to hell" and the Crown corporations are "losing fortunes."

"If we don't put some strong management into our provincial government we are going to be in serious trouble," he warned.

"I don't think the New Democratic party as presently constituted has the management competence to run a small city, let alone one of the major provinces of Canada."

He admitted he is "moderately concerned" about some of the personalities in the Social Credit party, but said he believes there is the potential within the party to provide the "renaissance, the rejuvenation" of B.C.

Asked if he really intended to pass out of public life and become a private citizen, Pollen conceded that his four years of community leadership have left him in a sense "psyched-up" to the satisfaction of the role.

"But I also think it's sometimes good for the jockey to get off the horse," he said, even if in his case the possibility of saddling-up always remain open for some future date.

The prospect of federal politics offers a "fantastic challenge," he said.

Curlers Left In Hacks

A malfunction in dehumidifying apparatus was causing heavy ice and management decided to cancel curling programs until a replacement part arrives.

Program manager Bill Johnston said league curling will resume Monday and lost time likely will be made up at the end of the season.

Johnston said the ice was not removed and when dehumidifiers are working properly again a cap of new ice would be applied.

All machinery and equipment in the new centre is covered by warranty for a minimum of one year, depending on the manufacturer, and in any case the contractor warranty applies the first year.

Consultants, Who Really Needs Them?

The city of Victoria has spent $2,450 hiring a consultant to advise on renovations to the McPherson Playhouse — only to reject every one of the firm's proposals which would have involved spending more than $90,000.

Instead, the parks and recreation committee recommended Thursday that alterations and redecoration on a more modest scale be planned and carried out by city personnel.

The McPherson report, which Mayor Peter Pollen termed "ludicrous," and another proposal that an outside study be commissioned on the municipally-owned Royal Theatre, led to serious questioning of the value of consultants' reports.

Ald. Sam Bawlf wondered whether they could be justified at a time when the city is economizing on all fronts in an effort to keep tax increases as low as possible.

Sounding a lot like his predecessor as finance committee chairman, former alderman Tom Christie, said: "We end up backing into a whole bunch of high-priced reports" which tend to have dubious worth and, in many cases, could be undertaken by city staff.

Bawlf suggested, and the committee agreed, that the $3,000 Royal Theatre study be scrapped.

One of the defined terms of reference was "a visual inspection of the structure to determine its structural integrity," and Bawlf speculated that meant deciding "whether the thing is going to fall down."

Another requirement was a check of all existing drawings of the original building and subsequent alterations or improvements. Commented the alderman: "A draftsman could do that . . . just a man with a measure."

Pollen confessed he was "horrified" that his earlier suggestions for modest refurbishing of the McPherson had been blown up into a major cost item, including the hiring of a consultant.

All he had envisaged was painting a faded wall in the foyer, placing a gay canopy over the hat-check counter, and a new carpet.

For carpet replacement throughout the theatre the consultants, Graphic Office Interiors Ltd., has suggested $30,000, with another $31,650 for alterations and $23,855 for purchase of new furniture.

City recreation manager didn't endorse a single proposal in the study. On the recommendation for concrete-based furniture in the main lobby, he noted that this type of chair used by Air Canada in Toronto is uncomfortable and soon acquires a "scruffy" appearance.

Trafficking In Heroin Charged

A 25-year-old Victoria man was charged in provincial court today with possession of heroin for trafficking after an early morning raid in which about 30 caps of the drug were seized.

Mark Edward Bennett, 2090 Comox, was released on his own recognizance and remanded to Nov. 14.

Prosecutor Malcolm McMicken said he will allege that police also seized trafficking "paraphernalia" in the hotel room raid.

He said Bennett's record stretches back to 1966 and includes two narcotics convictions.

Legal aid lawyer Richard Anthony told the court Bennett has had no convictions for a year and is receiving methadone treatment for his addiction.

FIVE YEARS FOR ARSON

A Victoria man was jailed for five years today after earlier pleading guilty to arson.

Andrew Paul Matwick, 33, of 1010 Russell, was sentenced when he appeared before Judge Harold Alder in Victoria provincial court.

The case arose from an incident Oct. 5 at Matwick's apartment when, after drinking and an argument, he piled blankets and papers in a living room doorway and set them alight, holding a man and woman in the room at knifepoint.

With the only exit blocked by the fire, they had to be rescued by firemen using a ladder and were treated in hospital for smoke inhalation.

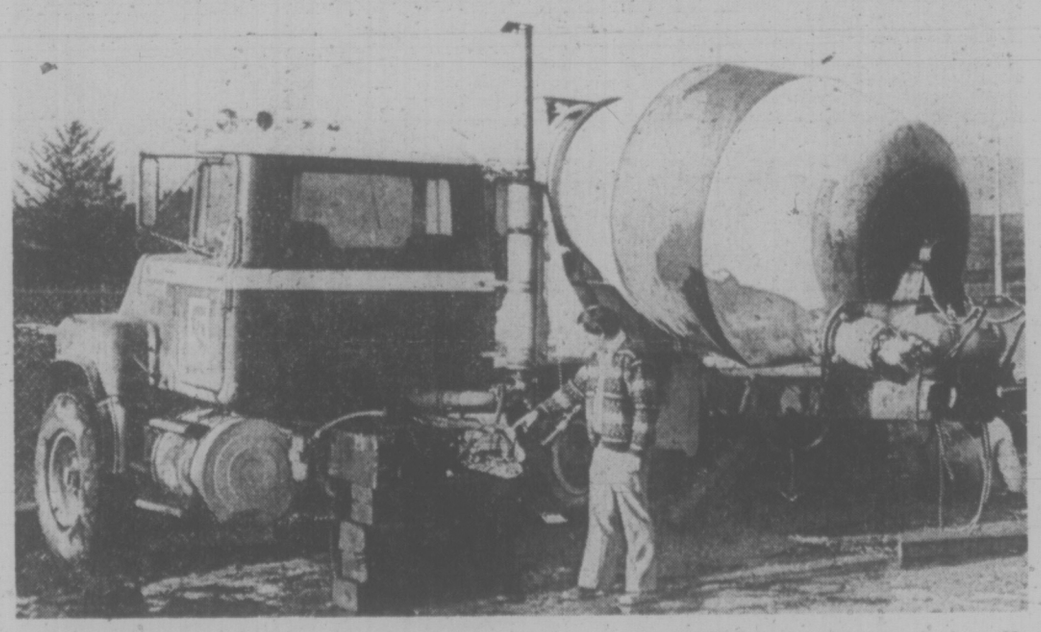
Yet Another False Alarm At Motel

Victoria firemen were called to Windsor Court, 252 Gorge, at 11:30 a.m. today for about the 14th time in five months.

It was yet another false alarm.

A Victoria youth was convicted of mischief in one false alarm last month, but a real blaze occurred a few weeks later when about 90 tenants were evacuated.



TWO HALVES may make a whole — but when you're talking about this Columbia Ready Mix cement truck which broke in two on Sooke Road Thursday, it's going to cost an estimated $25,000 to $30,000 to put pieces together again, according to manager Dennis Ridley, examining results here. He said frame broke in freak mishap. Cab of 28-ton truck went into ditch but driver Terence Lewis was unhurt. He said the break sounded like a rifle shot. (Irving Strickland photo).

Ask The Times

Q. How did the name "penthouse" originate? B.K.

A. A penthouse originally was a shed built on to a building. The word comes from the Latin words, pendere, meaning to hang, and ad, meaning to. Today, penthouse usually refers to a dwelling unit on the roof of a high building.

NHL Pondering Review of Refs

TORONTO (CP) — Scotty Morrison, referee-in-chief of the National Hockey League, said Thursday he thinks his officials can police the league, "but obviously the government thinks otherwise."

Morrison, commenting on the laying of a charge of assault causing bodily harm against Dan Maloney of Detroit Red Wings, said Thursday that he had contacted all 20 NHL referees with renewed instructions to step up enforcement of two rules.

"We felt when we left our referees training camp in the summer we had a good level of officiating, but obviously we'll have to review the situation," said Morrison.

Maloney was charged as the result of an incident in Wednesday night's NHL game between Toronto Maple Leafs and the Red Wings at Maple Leaf Gardens.

Maloney hit Toronto defenceman Brian Glennie in the second period of the game after Glennie had stepped into Detroit centre Bryan Hextall, knocking him to the ice from behind.

Glennie spent the night in a Toronto hospital under observation. He was released Thursday morning and will probably play in the Leafs game tonight with Kansas City Scouts.

Morrison said he asked the officials to strictly enforce rules 44 and 49 in the future. Rule 44 states that a match penalty shall be imposed on any player who deliberately attempts to injure an opponent, and adds that the incident must be reported to the league president for further action.

Rule 49 states a player who deliberately injures an opponent in any manner shall be given a match penalty.

Morrison said a match penalty should have been imposed against Maloney, who received a five-minute major from referee Bryan Lewis for the altercation with Glennie.

Punch Imlach, general manager and vice-president of Buffalo Sabres, said the "whole hockey violence thing has been blown out of proportion."

"It's hard to define what this guy (Ontario Attorney Roy McMurtry) is talking about," Imlach said. "The law is the law and the hockey business is the hockey business. Everyone has their definition of violence in hockey. Mine is two guys standing there hitting each other over the head with their sticks."

Last week, the newly-appointed McMurtry announced a crackdown on violence in all sports, and said players exhibiting violence in games would be charged.

"People take this stuff too seriously," Imlach said of violence and hockey. "In all my years with the Sabres I haven't seen excessive violence. We've got some guys that play tough but don't break the law."

Alan Eagleson, executive-director of the National Hockey League Players' Association, said there are four laws in hockey.

"There's a law in the U.S., one in Canada, one in Minnesota (referring to the Dave Forbes assault case) and now one in Ontario."

Barbara Glennie, wife of the eight-year NHL veteran involved in the altercation, said she has noticed an increase in violence in the sport.

"My immediate reaction to the situation is that hockey is getting carried away," she said. "Up until now, they haven't been doing enough to crack down on this sort of thing."

Wayne Blanchin, a one-time Victoria Cougar who was recalled from Hershey of the American League earlier in the day, scored the winning goal as Pittsburgh Penguins defeated St. Louis Blues 5-3.

Boxers Clout Lowly Blues

CHEMAINUS — London Boxing Club extended its winning streak to 12 games by hammering cellar-dwelling Chemainus Blues 9-3 Thursday in a Big Six Hockey League game at Fuller Lake Arena.

Aaron, Johnson Return

Times News Services

Hank Aaron and Darrell Johnson are ready for continued employment in major league baseball.

Aaron, the majors' all-time home run king with 745 in 22 seasons, announced Thursday he will play with Milwaukee Brewers for one more season and then will join the front office squad as a vice-president of the American League team.

Until the announcement, Aaron was considered a candidate to replace Del Crandall, fired as Brewers' manager on the last day of the season.

The Brewers still are looking for a field boss but it was reported in Milwaukee that Alex Grammas, third-base coach with Cincinnati Reds, may be first in line. Grammas met with Milwaukee officials Thursday.

Boston Red Sox solved their managerial problem for at least two more years. That's the length of a new contract signed by Johnson, who led Boston to the AL pennant this year.

McCaghey Sparks LBC To 5th Win

The victory snapped a tie for first place and boosted the Seniors two points ahead of runner-up Oak Bay.

Espo to Rangers

BOSTON — Boston Bruins stunned their National Hockey League followers today by dealing centre Phil Esposito, their five-time scoring champion, to New York Rangers.

Shock waves were reverberating throughout Boston after it was announced that Esposito and defenceman Carol Vadnais were dealt to the Rangers in exchange for defenceman Brad Park and centre Jean Ratelle.

The Rangers also sent minor-league defenceman Joe Zanussi to the Bruins.

It was the second time the high-scoring Esposito had been involved in a major trade.

In what was regarded as the all-time great steal, the big centre was acquired by the Bruins from Chicago Black Hawks in 1967 along with Ken Hodge and Fred Stanfield for Gilles Marotte, Pit Martin and Jack Norris.

Esposito, 33-year-old native of Sault Ste Marie, Ont., is in his 13th season in the NHL and holds the one-season record for points. He scored 76 goals and 76 assists for 152 points in the 1970-71 season with the Bruins.

In eight full seasons with Boston, Esposito never scored less than 35 goals. He scored 453 goals in his eight full years as a Bruin but had only six this season.

Earlier this year, there had been reports that Esposito might jump to the World Hockey Association but those were squelched in May when he signed "a multi-year" contract. That contract has been acquired by Rangers.

Esposito's popularity in Boston was exceeded only by the fans' adoration of defenceman Bobby Orr.

Today's news broke shortly after it was announced that Orr may get back into action Saturday night in Vancouver. Orr underwent knee surgery before the season started and recently started skating to get back into shape.

Who'll It Be In Goal?

Victoria Cougar coach Pat Ginnell is undecided about his starting goaltender, and that also may be a problem for Lethbridge Broncos' coach Earl Ingarfield.

Ginnell has three—holdovers Gerry Simpson and Dan Rogers, and newcomer Murray Bannerman, obtained from Winnipeg on a trial basis, Bannerman made his first start Tuesday when Cougars defeated Brandon Wheat Kings 6-2.

Ginnell did say, however, he plans to bring up centre Brent Kristoff from Nanaimo Clippers of the B.C. Junior League.

Ingarfield was left wondering about his goaltending after Kamloops Chiefs hung a 13-1 beating on Lethbridge Thursday. The Chiefs, running their undefeated streak to 10 games, scored nine against starter Rollie Boutin and then popped four against replacement Tim Steele.

Swim Sweep For Mt. Doug

Mt. Douglas accumulated a record 750 points Thursday while capturing a third consecutive title at the Greater Victoria high school swimming championship meet at Crystal Pool.

In addition to the Sir Edward Beatty Trophy for the over-all title, Mt. Douglas competitors took both the "A" trophy for club swimmers and the "B" event shield for novices.

Belmont made its best-ever showing, taking second place over-all with 510 points and finishing second in the "B" event with 165 points, 61 less than Mt. Doug.

Dunsmuir, competing in only its second meet, finished third over-all with 487 points and was second in the "A" event with 356 points, 168 less than the champions.

Oak Bay, which held the title for 23 consecutive years until Mt. Douglas took the laurels, sagged to a seventh-place finish with 199 points. The Bays finished second in each of the past two years and have claimed the title a total of 27 times during the 39-year-old competition.

However, Oak Bay still had the outstanding female swimmer in Judy Newman.

Miss Newman was the only triple winner in the "A" event and set records while finishing first in the 100-metre individual medley, the 50-metre breastroke and the 100-metre breastroke.

Records were broken in all but 17 of the 44 events. Karen Rushcall of Mt. Douglas won the 100-metre butterfly in one minute, 9.7 seconds to slice 31 seconds from the standard set by her sister Carolyn in 1973 and established a mark of 31.7 seconds in the 50-metre butterfly.

Doug Portlance of Belmont set records in the 50-metre backstroke and 100-metre breaststroke while John Ellis of St. Michaels snapped records in the 50-metre and 100-metre breaststroke events to emerge as the top male swimmers.

The Bob Smirl Memorial Trophy for sportsmanship was shared by Laurie Stocks of Claremont and Elizabeth Dewey of Mt. Douglas.

SPECTRUM, BAYS SET FOR FINAL

Defending-champion Spectrum and Oak Bay, who will both represent Victoria in the B.C. high school soccer championship next weekend in Abbotsford, square off tonight at 8 in Royal Athletic Park in a struggle for the Greater Victoria playoff title.

Spectrum has nearly the entire team back which defeated Reynolds Roadrunners 3-2 in last season's Colonist Cup final while Oak Bay has nine returnees from last year's squad, which made the semi-finals.

GYPSY JEWEL TOPS 'CAP

There's a full field of eight fillies and mares listed for Saturday's running of the Royal Oak Inn Purse at Sandown Park. The distance will be one mile and 70 yards and the purse $2,000.

High weight has been assigned to Gypsy Jewel, a four-year-old chestnut fully that finished a bang-up second to No Help over one mile in Monday's Invitational Handicap. She will carry 121 pounds.

Also expected to draw considerable support is George Harknett's locally-owned, four-year-old Double Dev, which has a second, a fourth and a fifth at the meeting. Scheduled to pack 118 pounds Saturday, Double Dev finished behind Gypsy Jewell in that Monday race.

Other horses entered are Choya (117 pounds), Canadian Colleen (116), Our Diamond (116, Craigdina (115), Fitsy's Story (115) and Le Farge (114).

Field Holds Up for CIAU Soccer

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

The weatherman threw the book at the early arrivals for the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union soccer championships Thursday but at least one coach isn't worried.

Tony Richards, coach of Dalhousie University Tigers of Halifax, took a look at the Centennial Stadium field and had nothing but praise.

"We're used to playing on poor surfaces," he said Thursday night at a pre-tournament coach's meeting. "This will be like playing on a billiard table."

UVic sports and recreation manager Mike Elcock agreed there should be little trouble with the surface in the stadium, but he warned that the No. 5 soccer pitch, also in use for the five-team tournament, could be muddy.

This afternoon's first-round schedule pitted Dalhousie, sporting a 10-0 won-lost record in league play with playoff victories over New Brunswick and Memorial of Newfoundland, against coach Brian Hughes' UVic Vikings, Canada West conference champs with a 3-0 record in the round-robin playoffs.

In another game this afternoon, Queen's Golden Gaels of Kingston met Manitoba Bisons. The Gaels, coached by John Walker, swept to the Ontario championship with seven wins and three ties in 10 league starts and a 2-1 playoff victory over Waterloo Warriors.

Bisons are coached by Cameron Howes and took the Great Plains Athletic Conference title with three wins and three ties in a round-robin playoff involving Lakehead and Winnipeg.

Due to arrive today are Concordia Stingers of Montreal, coached by Harry Hus. The Stingers swept to the Quebec University Athletic Association crown with an 8-0 won-lost record, scoring 67 goals and allowing only five. They drew a first-round bye and play the winner of the Manitoba-Queen's game Saturday a 2:30 p.m. in Centennial Stadium. The survivor plays the Dal-UVic winner in the final Sunday at 2:30.

Consolation games for the losers are scheduled Saturday at 1 p.m. and Sunday at 12 noon, both on the No. 5 soccer field.

In the event of ties, two 15-minute overtime periods will be played.

Access Picture Varies For Antlerless Opening

If this blustery weather keeps up, the more skillful hunters out of the hordes who will take to the field Saturday morning for the opening of antlerless deer season on Vancouver Island will likely bag their limit.

Anyone going out should check the regulations carefully and note that the Cowichan Lake-Cowichan River (sub-unit 1-4) and Qualicum Beach to Campbell River (sub-unit 1-6) areas are open on a bucks-only basis this season.

Hunters should also be aware that the access picture in most major logging areas is a hodge-podge at present. I've tried to summarize access information below but a few things should be kept in mind before heading offf.

Heavy rains have caused a number of washouts and road repair crews can be encountered at any place or time this weekend. Likewise, a number of the smaller logging operations or contract loggers could be active, so watch out for loaded trucks.

Before venturing up any of the side roads, make sure you can get back if one of the bridges or culverts happens to wash out while you're above it. If you're trapped in this manner a long wait might ensue before either you or your vehicle can be retrieved.

And alway carry a good supply of matches, food, axe and compass — together with the knowledge of how to properly use them.

For those planning to make a long weekend of it, Pacific Logging, B.C. Forest Products at Port Renfrew and Malloch and Mosseley take Monday off and work Tuesday.

The lone exception on the southern end of the Island is Canadian Puget Sound Lumber and Timber Co. at Jordan River, which will work Monday and take Tuesday off.

Other operations on the Island that will be open to hunters Monday but restricted for, access Tuesday are Crown Zellerbach's Nitinat Division; MacMillan Bloedel's Sproat and Franklin River divisions; B.C. Forest Products' Caycuse and Crofton divisions; Tahsis Company's Gold River and Zeballos division and Rayonier's Holberg division.

Loggers at Crown Zellerbach's Nanaimo and Courtenay operations, as well as Mac and Blo's Shawnigan, Chemainus and Nanaimo divisions will work Monday and take Tuesday off.

Four of Mac and Blo's divisions — Cameron, Menzies Bay, Eve River and Port MacNeill — will enjoy a four-day weekend by taking both Monday and Tuesday off.

In a dramatic departure from most other comapnies, Canadian Forest Products operations at Woss Lake and Beaver Cove will work Monday through Thursday and take Friday (Nov. 14) off in lieu of the Remembrance Day holiday. So, if you're planning a hunting trip to the Nimpkish Valley area during the antlerless season, which ends Nov. 16, it might be worthwhile to wait until that weekend.

Other CFP camps on the Island are expected to follow suit.

Most areas where logging is going on are closed to recreational use entirely while others are only closed where the actual logging is in progress. So watch for signs.

I can't help but feel, however, that the needs of recreationists would be better served if the companies and unions could set up these holiday periods on an annual basis so that working days would coincide throughout the Island.

Since a great number of company roads link together at the boundaries of their jurisdictions, it might make things a little easier and safer for both recreationists and loggers.

Spurs' Owner Vows to Continue

DENVER (AP) — Denver Spurs owner Ivan Mullenix has denied a report by a Toronto newspaper that the Spurs and four other World Hockey Association teams might fold by next summer.

"We fully intend to operate the Denver Spurs in the WHA, not only for the 1975-76 season but in the future, as long as the Denver community wants professional hockey," Mullenix said in a statement Thursday.

Mullenix acknowledged Denver's poor early season attendance in its first year in the WHA.

"Although we admittedly have been disappointed at our low early-season attendance, we are now getting assurances and support from the business community that we feel will produce the kind of general fan support to make this a solid franchise," Mullenix said.

"The transition to major league hockey was not expected to be made without an introductory period in which the fans of Denver could see what the product looked like. We feel our team has now come together and is producing the kind of excitement that will result in a great improvement at the gate."

The Spurs, with a 3-5-1 record, have averaged slightly more than 3000 in the new 16,400-seat McNichols Arena.

The Toronto Globe and Mail had reported Wednesday that San Diego Mariners could fold by Christmas. The story also named the Spurs, Calgary Cowboys, Cleveland Crusaders and Minnesota Fighting Saints as other WHA teams in financial trouble.

The newspaper quoted Saints' president Wayne Belisle and player agent Steve Heller of Montreal in the story.

"I don't think Denver realized what they were getting into when they joined the league," said Belisle. "At the present time, I don't think hockey can survive in Denver," said Heller.

Salmon a Bonus for Racing Director

Fate dealt John Watson a bonus on the weekend when he and Rod McBride gave up the fun of racing to direct the sixth annual regatta between Vancouver and Victoria Thunderbird sailors.

Aboard Drambuie, John, while waiting for the first of the five races to start on Saturday, caught a good-sized fish for supper.

The Victoria team again pulled off a victory, the winning boats being Redskin, Shamash, Sungoid, Umpka, Morning Calm, Sea Jay, Freeway and Irrawaddy.

The Turkey Head Sailing Association has another two races slated to be sailed in waters off Oak Bay on Sunday. Start times are 10 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Several THSA boats turned out last Sunday to take part in a 16-miler, the first of the Royal Victoria yacht Club's long-distance fall and winter races.

Two RVYC boats that cleaned up at Royal Vancouver Yacht Club's regatta were home to continue their winning streak. Greg Oliver's Distant Drummer was the first International Offshore Rule boat, beating Al Nelson's Lucifer by one minute.

In Davidsons it was Mike Fraser, and Rob Thompson won in Fireball competition. There'll be series racing again on Saturday, beginning at 1:30 p.m.

The Canoe Bay Sailing Club has another six-miler planned for Saturday off Sidney. The start gun goes at 1 p.m.

Fort-nine boats paced it out in last Saturday's six-miler, which was won by C. Van Barloemen's Starwagon. John Graeme's newly-furbished six-metre Llanoria was second.

Women will take over at the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, on Sunday for the ladies' skipper race in keel boats, starting at 12:30 p.m. There will also be the usual dinghy series racing.

Paul Jensen's Dania was the winner in last Sunday's keel boat racing. Fred Douglas's Virtue and Dennis Reilley's Green Teal placed second and third. George Kirkwood, Gary Rogers and Leon Politano were the top Laser sailors.

'RIDICULOUS' ROUND PUTS BEN IN FRONT

MARBLE FALLS (AP) — Ben Crenshaw, playing what he termed a "ridiculous round" of two-under-par-70, clung to a one-stroke lead Thursday over Don Massengale in the third round of the $25,000 Texas State Open golf tournament.

Crenshaw had racked up back-to-back 67s the first two days of the tourney but lost three penalty shots Thursday and missed three putts from inside three feet to come in with a 204, after three rounds.

Massengale, hitting 17 greens for the third day in a row, shot a 68 to gain two strokes on Crenshaw.

WFL Players Given Okay to Join NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, officially cleared the way Thursday night for NFL teams to sign former World Football League players for this season until Nov. 26.

The NFL cleared one former WFL player, tackle Chris Morris of San Antonio, Thursday and said that it would process requests for clearance as they came in from players.

Rozelle said the two new franchises, Tampa and Seattle, could also sign WFL players for 1976, when those two teams will begin play in the NFL.

"All 28 teams can sign WFL players for next year," Rozelle said.

"As long as the two new teams are being permitted to sign them, we felt the players should have the right of choice of the other 26 teams as well."

Rozelle said the NFL owners had not been able to finalize a plan for stocking the two new clubs during Thursday's day-long meeting.

Radio Appeal Sends Deaf Girl to Swim Meet

VANCOUVER (UPI) — A 14-year-old girl who has never heard a sound in her life will fly to Venezuela next week to take part in an international sports meet — thanks to the generosity of Vancouver radio listeners.

In a two-day appeal over station CHQM, listeners donatel more than $1,500 to enable Theresa Helm to swim in the first Pan-Am Games of silent sports.

Three other Canadian teenagers — also swimmers and also deaf — are expected to take part.

"It's been a fantastic response," CHQM sports director Bob Gourlay said Thursday. "Vancouver is the swimming capital of Canada and we wanted to get the ordinary people involved in helping Theresa. They've come through in tremendous style."

Theresa, smiling but shy, is the daughter of a German father and a Mexican mother. She has been deaf since birth in Edmonton in April, 1961.

She began swimming five years ago and now trains under Canada's Olympic coach, Deryk Snelling, at Vancouver's top swim club, the Dolphins. She is expected to compete in at least six events in Venezuela, including the 800 and 1500 meters freestyle in which she has set marks awaiting recognition as world records for deaf swimmers.

The weeklong games open in Maracaibo Nov. 15.

Through sign language and some spoken words, Theresa said she can hear nothing — not even the roar of the crowd when racing or the starter's gun.

"I watch the other swimmers, then the starter's hand," she said. "I've learned to pick up the movement of the finger and the flash of the gun."

Her ambition is to compete in the next Olympics for the deaf in Romania in 1977 and the regular Olympics in Moscow in 1980.

Coach Snelling said: "She is a talented girl and could go a long way. She's a sterling example for all other children with similar handicaps."

West Coast Native Art Display 'Masterpiece'

OTTAWA (CP) — "A masterpiece made up of masterpieces" is how noted French anthropologist Claude Levi-Strauss describes the National Museum of Man display The Children of the Raven.

This permanent display of the art of West Coast natives, officially opened this week by Prime Minister Trudeau, contains houseware, ceremonial clothes and sacred objects.

For several of the artists present the recognition of their people's art is long overdue. But with this recognition comes a touch of regret.

"My grandfather, Chief Mungo Martin, decided from the day I was born I would be an artist. Not only did I learn to carve, I learned about our dancing, our culture," said Tony Hunt, a Kwakiutl artist.

"Now, with this surge of interest in our art there are 60 people calling themselves artists, but I only consider 12 of them know enough about our culture to be true artists."

Norman Tait, who specializes in carving, agreed.

"I know a lot of white people who have the technique down better than many native artists but somehow their work is empty. I wish I could explain it better."

Both had praise for the display itself. "It is especially good that they dress figures in the costumes, so people can get a feel for them," said Hunt.

"Often you'll just see an intricate blanket or carved mask hung on a wall and the whole purpose of these things is lost."

The display culminates four years of labor by Dr. Marie Francoise Guedon, the museum's Pacific Coast ethnologist.

"I chose the raven as my theme because in the native mythology he was always playing tricks and I wanted his vitality to come through. I'm tired of seeing cold, impersonal museum displays," she said.

The display is anything but cold. Each object is subtly lit to bring out its fine lines and carving. Warm reds, browns and golds prevail.

Monument Honors Canada

SEOUL (AP) — South Korea today unveiled a monument at an old Korean War battlefield near Kapyong, 40 miles east of Seoul, honoring a Canadian regiment that fought a fierce three-day battle there in April, 1951, to stop onrushing Chinese troops.

The monument, a natural stone with a black bronze plate attached in the middle mounted on a granite stand, reads: "Dedicated to Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infanty (PPCLI)."

It was erected by the UN Korean War Allies Association, a civic organization in Seoul.

Retired Colonel J. R. Stone, of Victoria, who commanded the 2nd Battalion of the PPCLI in that battle, was the guest of honor unveiling the monument.

The bloody three-day stand at Kapyong by the Princess Patricias and other elements of the 27th Commonwealth Brigade blocked the advance of a Chinese division in that sector during 1951.

It was believed at that time at UN command headquarters that without the Commonwealth Brigade's gallant stand at Kapyong, the Chinese might have outflanked other UN forces and Seoul might have fallen for the second time.

Plucky Boy Stands Taller

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Exactly 22 months after the first casts were placed on his dwarfed legs, Joey Seitz of Fort St. John has reached the end of the first phase of his ordeal.

Joey was stripped of his last protective shin cast Tuesday by an orthopedic surgeon at University of Alberta who guided him through a procedure to correct achondroplastia, an inherited disease which prevented his legs and arms from growing as fast as the rest of his body.

Joey, 12, now is 52 inches tall — eight inches more than when the procedure was started.

His mother, Marie Seitz, said in a telephone interview that he can do anything he wants — except play hockey this year.

The youngster was a standout in minor hockey at Fort St. John, in the Peace River block of northeastern British Columbia, before hanging up his skates to undergo the surgery.

While he was in hospital in Edmonton, he was allowed out of hospital to attend a Team Canada 74 practice more than a year ago. He received hockey souvenirs from across the continent after newspaper articles told of his sorrow when some of his keepsakes were stolen from his mother's car.

To lengthen his legs, the bones of his shins were broken and skewered with rods he used to crank the bones apart. Throughout the months, he had planned to return to hockey as soon as possible.

But he got word this week that he would have to lay off for another year to let the legs strengthen.

That won't prevent him playing floor hockey, however. He already is playing centre for an informal team here.

And he has skated, too. About three weeks ago, with a cast still on his right leg, he skated for 15 to 20 minutes without ill effect.

2,000 Parcels On Auction Block

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office has more than 2,000 undelivered parcels on its hands — not due to the mail workers strike, but because of wrong addresses, poor wrapping or simple refusal of addresses to accept them.

However, the strike gives postal management an extra problem in preparing to auction them off here Nov. 26-29: How to distribute 4,000 hefty catalogues 1¼ inches thick to prospective buyers.

It was originally planned that the $2 catalogues would be available through neighborhood post offices. If the strike continues much longer that is out.

"A decision has been made to go ahead with the sale, and the catalogues will be sold at the point of sale on the day of the sale and perhaps a day earlier," said Dave Carter, manager of public affairs, eastern Ontario postal district.

The 732-page catalogue, 2,500 copies in English and 1,500 in French, makes fascinating reading. Everything from adult games to best-selling books to power tools will be for sale.

MISSION TO EUROPE

Five marine equipment company representatives from B.C. will leave for Europe Nov. 10 on a government-sponsored trade mission.

The members will spend 2½ weeks visiting marine centres in Holland, Sweden, Norway, France and Britain and will tour Amsterdam's Europort 75, one of the world's largest marine exhibitions.

The purpose of the mission is to examine European markets in terms of direct sales and manufacturing agreements.

POST FOR MARCOS' WIFE

MANILA (AP) — President Ferinand Marcos' wife, Imelda, Thursday took her first political post as governor of Metropolitan Manila, a new governmental unit with 4.5 million residents.

The position will give her political exposure second only to her husband and increase the possibility of her succeeding him in the presidency.

Marcos, who rules by decree under martial law, swore his wife in after she made a brief acceptance speech broadcast on all major television and radio stations.

Six days ago, the president rejected a movement to draft Mrs. Marcos to head the new government, which includes 17 municipalities. Mayors and prominent businessmen had asked her to head the area government because they said it needed a figure of national stature.

The move was strongly supported by newspapers either controlled or edited by Mrs. Marcos' younger brother, Benjamin Romualdez, governor of Leyte province, and by a cousin, E. P. Romualdez.

Marcos said the new government will not begin operating until all members of the commission are named, possibly in about two months.

Doctors Attend EMI

About 40 university teachers, family doctors, nurses and social workers will take part in a six-day seminar at Eric Martin Institute next week sponsored by the College of Family Physicians of Canada.

The seminar, first of its kind in B.C. and first to be directed primarily to the needs of family physicians, has been organized by Dr. Alan Clews of Victoria, chairman of the college's national committee on research, and Dr. Fred Demanuele of Toronto.

Heritage Committee Hearing

The Hallmark Society will likely get a second chance to push for establishment of a hertitage advisory committee in Esquimalt.

The society asked council's zoning committee Monday to reconsider its refusal to establish a committee in the municipality and the committee Monday recommended council give the society a hearing.

A letter from the society indicated it was prepared to go to council and explain the legislation first hand, as well as outline some 40 sites in the municipality which would qualify for heritage designation.

Esquimalt is the only core municipality that has decided against setting up a heritage advisory committee.

The Hallmark society urged the committee be established to review the society's inventory and brief of heritage homes for Esquimalt.

Gorst Faces Test

The Esquimalt New Democratic Party will hold a nomination meeting at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 11, at the Esquimalt Recreation Centre on Fraser Street.

Members entitled to vote will be registered from 7 p.m. on.

Constituency association spokeaman Alec Adams said he expects there may be a nomination contest for the seat now held by NDP MLA Jim Gorst who is expected to return from India this weekend.

The Victoria Conservative nomination meeting will be held Nov. 15 at noon at the Georgian Room of the Empress.

A constituency association spokesman said she hopes there will be "two strong candidates" but a final decision will not be made until the middle of next week.

Film Produced On Training For Olympics

MONTREAL (CP) — The organizing committee for the 1976 Summer Olympics has launched a 28-minute documentary film of the training of Canadian athletes for the Games.

The Summer Before was shot in seven Canadian cities and is scheduled for distribution to television and Famous Players theatres, the committee announced Thursday.

It was directed by Donald Britain for Crawley Films, and shows Canadians training in six Olympic sports.

AM/FM Stereo Receiver
Output power 100 watts RMS (into 8 OHMS—50 watt/channel). Total: One important reason why the AGS 160 can perform at this level with maximum signal to noise ratio is that special IC transistors combined with heavy duty silicon power transistors are used in the main power circuit. Extra sensitive AM and FM reception: In the FM section the AGS 160 incorporated FET along with four IC's (integrated circuits) and five IF amplifier stages. The AM section also uses IC transistors and AGS circuits. Advanced protector circuit: A micro relay switch prevents damage to speakers or to main output power circuit due to overloading. Four channel ready: All jacks are provided for a four channel matrix adaptor. Two speakers systems can be operated simultaneously for this purpose. IC Pre-Amp: The AGS 160 features a two stage pre-amp incorporating five IC's — essential to produce the wide dynamic range that makes excellent fidelity possible.

'Hypocrisy' of Rehabilitation Spurring New Goals for Prisons

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Like people waking from troubles dreams, provincial criminologists are beginning to realize that rehabilitation within the jail system has been a total failure.

In an 80-page report on B.C. corrections completed earlier this year for the attorney-general, University of B.C. law professors William Black and Joseph Weiler condemned the rehabilitation ideal as "excessive in its ambitions, abusive in its operation ... largely a leap of faith."

They concluded rehabilitation was nothing more than a delusion and charged that to perpetuate the model was a "grand hypocrisy."

While he is loath to take as strong a stand as Weiler and Black, John Ekstadt, deputy minister in charge of corrections agrees, with their basic finding — that rehabilitation has been a futile exercise.

"It's been shown to be not only unworkable but also counter-productive," he says.

Why?

One of the main reasons, he says, has been the persistent attitude that criminality is some sort of sickness. The problem is, he adds, all the attention has gone on treating the illness while the reason the offender is sent to jail is largely forgotten.

Now, he indicates, there has been a swing in thought with more criminologists contending criminal behavior is a normal experience within any society and not necessarily evidence of pathology or individual unhealthiness.

It is leading to some sweeping changes in outlook which will affect not only the way corrections centres should be operated but in the way offenders should be treated.

"We've gone a fair way in the past three years to downplaying and absolutely denying the value of treatment or rehabilitation as a goal in corrections," Ekstedt says. "Now we're going more for the notion of a utilitarian concept where the offender is made aware of the consequences to his behavior in clear, concise terms."

It has reached the point where senior officials in the corrections system are referring to jails not as places of rehabilitation any more but rather as places of consequence.

The redirection of the government's approach to corrections has already been shown in two fairly recent developments — the closing of the centre in Haney and the growth of the community corrections program.

Ekstedt says Haney, once the major rehabilitation centre in the province for young offenders, was abandoned because it proved to be a "total loss."

Less than four per cent of the inmates who took trade training ever practised their new skills on the street, he said.

"Even those who really wanted the training never followed through with the trade once they got out.

"They found there were all kinds of other things they needed which the course didn't teach them.

"They may have learned a trade but they didn't learn how to work or the discipline required to hold down a job."

If there is an answer, he suggests, it lies in the community corrections program where inmates attend school or hold jobs in the community while reporting back to jail each night for the duration of their sentence.

"Pragmatically and, functionally it is one of the best things happening in the system," he says.

At present, between 12,000 and 13,000 are involved in community supervision programs in the province. Another 1,600 to 1,700 are confined in provincial jails—the same number as was institutionalized 10 to 15 years ago.

"What we are trying to do is increase the probation service rather than the jails."

Ekstedt believes a person sent to jail should receive a definite sentence. He would like to see a reduction in remission time—the time a prisoner earns off his sentence for good behavior.

"I think we are very close to coming upon a model which will either eliminate or severely modify remission in institutions."

He also sees little value in the indeterminate sentence which gives correction staff the authority to release an inmate at any time up to the maximum set by the judge, based on progress an inmate makes in rehabilitation programs.

Ekstedt says both remission time and the indeterminate sentence have placed an "inordinate amount of sheer power" in the hands of corrections officials.

He says, however, that despite the "good intentions of staff", the power has been used not so much to manipulate behavior changes in the inmate as it has been to maintain order in the institution.

He says a person sent to jail soon realizes he must play along with the authorities and that as long as he agrees to anything he'll get out or get easy time.

Ekstedt notes judges still set indeterminate sentences with the mistaken notion jails are places of rehabilitation.

"The judges and corrections are out of synch with each other at present" he says.

"In terms of reform," Ekstedt says, "corrections is miles ahead of a lot of the other branches of the justice system.

"The reason is not that we're so good as it is we had got so bad. Corrections, because it was so visible, was the focus of attention, the subject of hard criticism.

"In the past few years we've undergone a severe self-analysis."

The results of that analysis are just now beginning to be felt he says.

CANADA-FRANCE TIFF?

OTTAWA (CP) — Relations between Canada and France will deteriorate unless Canada is admitted to an economic summit conference of Western Nations later this month in Paris, External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen said Thursday.

He told reporters that the exclusion of Canada, if it occurs, is bound to affect relations between the two countries "and it won't be a favorable effect."

France objects to Canada's attendance because it wants to hold the conference down to a manageable size, he said. But Ottawa considers Canada's economic clout sufficient to warrant admission.

He commented after John Diefenbaker (PC—Prince Albert) complained in the Commons that Canada has been humiliated by France's decision.

MacEachen told MPS that the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom and West Germany are all pressing for Canada's admission. He hoped that France would relent.

"No other country can speak for Canada, he said.

Diefenbaker said Canada is begging "on bended knee." This should not be the case after the help France was given by Canadian troops in two world wars.

MacEachen denied the suggestion. "We won't get on bended knee for anyone to attend this conference," he told reporters.

He said he is still hopeful Canada will be admitted.

Originally, organizers wanted to restrict the conference to five countries, he said. Italy was admitted later but France argued that a further extension to include Canada would throw the conference open to all countries.

"They say he (Bourassa) has the closest relations of all with the President of France," Diefenbaker joked with reporters afterward.

Charges in Death Stayed

NANAIMO (CP) — Provincial court Judge Stanley Wardill granted a stay of proceedings Thursday in the case of Chew Excavating Co. of Victoria.

The company was charged with a violation of the Workers' Compensation Act's accident prevention regulations in the Oct. 3, 1974, death of Richard Jancowski, 28, of Parksville, who was electrocuted at a Nanaimo construction site.

A stay was also granted on one of the charges against Raymond Crawford, of Victoria, the company supervisor, who was charged under the same act.

A second charge against Crawford was dismissed by Judge Wardill after the Crown submitted no evidence.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, I attended the third funeral in two months, and I promised myself I would not attend another whose services were conducted by this minister.

Each time I was trapped for over an hour with a preacher who started with the sins of Adam and Eve and worked his way through the New Testament.

He said nothing to comfort the family and made no mention of the deceased "sinners" and predicting that the world was going to hell because of its greed and selfishness. Then he wrapped it up with a pitch to raise money for the church's building campaign.

It was revolting!

People come to a funeral to pay their last respects to the deceased, not to be bawled out by the preacher or to be solicited for money.

What is your opinion of a minster who would take advantage of a full house in the above manner — Revolted.

DEAR REVOLTED: I think he's a short-sighted opportunist who believes in shooting the ducks while they're flying.

DEAR ABBY: I have this very dear friend I'll call "Agnes." She's alone, so I invite her to my home for dinner occasionally.

Agnes is the sweetest, most generous person I know, but she weighs about 400 pounds, and when she plops herself down, she wrecks our furniture.

First she broke the springs in our new sofa. Another time, she broke my husband's favorite rocking chair. Fortunately, my husband is very handy, so he was able to repair the chair. However, he has instructed me to please invite Agnes OUT for dinner in the future because he's worried about our furniture.

I don't want to offend Agnes, but I don't want to take any more chances with our furniture.

Is there a solution?—Agnes' Friend.

DEAR FRIEND: Of course. Lucky you to have a husband who's handy with repairs. Ask him to reinforce one chair to accommodate Agnes. Surely that isn't too much to do for the sweetest, most generous person you know.

Church Minister Takes Advantage

STUDENTS AT Withrow School in Toronto, led by Ralph Rohrich, 10, are making a bid to be included in the Guinness Book of World Records. The 600 children, helped by their parents and artist Fred Franzen, are painting a mural on the school wall which they expect to be the largest in the world.

Grey Flannel, Pin Stripes Back in Men's Fashions

WASHINGTON (WP) — Current men's fashions with their emphasis on past classics add up to a commentary on American culture in the fall of 1975.

Some call it "nostalgia," others "reaction" or "consolidation." Whatever, suit racks are crammed with vests, grey flannel and pin stripes — ratifying a trend that began a year ago and reflecting the hallmarks of the '50s.

White shirts are back on the shelf. Belts are narrowing down fast, collar points are shorter, and may even be linked by collar pins.

It is, all in all, a dressier more regimented look that runs flatly counter to the "anything goes" peacock informality that a somewhat euphoric fashion industry saw as "shattering traditional men's clothing styles" just five years ago.

While the tieless leisure suit introduced in the early '70s, remains a popular seller in many quarters, the same recall of an earlier decade shows up in casual wear.

Bass "Weejun" loafers — favored by the man in the greay flannel suit for pairing with chinos, striped shirt and a shetland sweater at fraternity beer parties — are again hot items. Only the price, $35, shows generational progression.

Tweed sportscoats are back, so are the shetlands and chinos, and so are mufflers. Jeans, now mostly prewashed and soft may still be a campus staple but denim — that '60s hallmark — is fading fast in men's wear, if not women's.

Even "new" items, like multiple variations of the rugby shirt and multi-pocketed, epauletted shirts that bring to mind the days of the British Empire, are firmly tied to tradition.

The military influence is deliberately "old" and continental, not contemporary and definitely not '60s army surplus, though the bright colors and "natural" fabrics show cross-pollination.

Many of today's popular fabrics — poplin, corduroy, madras, flannel Viyella — were also classics in the '50s revived in the '60s by those who preferred "natural" to test-tube fibres in food and clothing. A few have been injected with a shot of synthetics for wasn 'n' wear purposes, but the touch and texture are the same.

There is a fine irony in the rush for uniform and rugby shirts. It wasn't so very long ago that many students were anti-establishment, marching in anti-war protests. Their motley use of army surplus spelled defiance, not nostalgia. Many of today's customers will have worn both types of military garb — motifs of abrupt shifts in cultural attitudes.

These shifts are echoed in the return of Ellery Queen to television and the climb of '50s songs and their derivaties on pop music charts.

Welch Medical Report

By Dr. WILLIAM J. WELCH

Some weeks ago I commented on Dr. Herbert Benson's relaxation technique to lower high blood pressure. His method, which is not unlike a demystified version of age-old meditation, is simplicity itself.

Sitting quietly for 20 minutes at a time twice a day is what it consists of. This deliberate exercise in relation can apparently decrease the activity of the sympathetic nervous system, slow the rate of breathing, lower the body metabolism and heart rate, and bring down the level of the blood pressure.

Dr. Benson's patients are instructed to sit quietly in a comfortable position with eyes closed, to relax all muscle tension and become aware of their breathing. With each exhalation, they are instructed to say a simple word such as "one."

Except for the use of the word "one" instead of a specially chosen "mantra" and an avoidance of the predictions of wholesale benefit, his method is not unjike that of many schools of meditation that have been coming into this country for at least the last decade.

Concerning the technique as Dr. Benson applies it, he does acknowledge that, apart from the specific effect he was after, the patients in his study report that they felt better, more relaxed and better able to cope with problems.

Dr. Benson himself says: "It is cheap and simple and has no side-effects other than those of prayer."

Now, together with Dr. Sidney Alexander, chief of cardiology at the Lahey Clinic in Boston, and Dr. Charles L. Feldman, electrical engineer at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, he has studied the effect of such relaxation in reducing the frequency of a particularly troublesome, abnormal heart beat, called a premature ventricular contraction (PVC).

PVCs occur in quite normal hearts and there they are of little consequence. But in heart disease in which the oxygen supply to the muscle is inadequate or dangerously uneven, PVCs can set the heart to racing so rapidly and irregularly as to be a threat to survival.

Dr. Benson and his colleagues taught the relaxation technique to 11 patients with heart disease involving poor oxygen supply to the heart muscle.

Eight of the 11 patients experienced a significant decrease in the frequency of PVCs and in two of them the abormal beats were virtually eilimated.

What is especially interesting about Dr. Benson's work is the further light it throws on the entire subject of influencing bodily functions once thought to be beyond voluntary control. The lowering of blood pressure, the relief of headaches and the re-establishment of control of incontinent bodily sphincters, are examples of successful voluntary intervention.

Whether it is by relaxation, reconditioning by means of feedback techniques, yoga discipline or self-hypnotism, the administration "control Yourself," is beginning to mean something specific.

Magnesium Linked To Cell Regulation

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — University of California scientists have discovered that magnesium, a common ingredient of many biochemical reactions, has the capacity to regulate growth and other functions in living animal cells.

The scientists said this discovery could lead to a better understanding of what goes wrong when cancer strikes the human body.

Exotic Garden

University of Victoria is developing its first exotic garden and has formed a committee of local horticulturalists and gardeners to get it started.

The committee, announced Wednesday by UVic president Dr. Howard Petch, is called Garden Friends of the University.

Work began this summer on a two-acre wooded site inside Ring Road near the Henderson Road entrance to the university.

Basis for the gardens is a rare collection of 350 rhododendrons bequeathed to UVic by the late Mrs. Jeanne Simpson of Lake Cowichan, who first proposed the garden idea.

As a variety of other plants are added the garden development will extend to a larger wooded acreage across Ring Road from the present site.

Lunch Meat Found High In Bacteria

TORONTO (CP) — A University of Guelph microbiologist says one package of bologna, ham or macaroni-and-cheese loaf may contain up to 12,000 times more bacteria than the competitive package next to it but there are no government standards for the bacteria count in processed meats.

He found the lunchon meats of one major distributor contained, on the average, 12,000 times as much bacteria as the same meat packaged by a competitor.

Samples of luncheon products of two other well-known meat distributors were found to contain 760 times and 260 times the amount of bacteria as the low-bacteria sample.

Dr. A. K. Morris, director of the federal meat inspection program in Ontario, says there are no bacteria-count standards for processed meat.

Dr. Morris said in an interview that standards have been discussed by the department of health and welfare.

"They probably will come up with standards, but there is nothing now," he said.

Bike Path Urged For Valley

COMOX — Council will ask the highways department to designate the scenic road linking Courtenay to Comox as a major bicycle path.

It will also investigate the possibility of a bicycle path along the gas line easement running from Torrance Road to Knight Road.

Council's decision follows a petition by Girl Guides requesting bicycle paths for recreation and safe routes to ride.

Modern Root Cellar

If you fought rising food prices by raising a garden this year, chances are good that you'll enter autumn with more vegetables on hand than you care to can or freeze . . . yet you do want to preserve that produce for winter consumption. What to do?

The ideal solution might be a modern-day version of grandpa's root cellar. Any corner of an unheated basement will do. Insulate its ceiling (so heat can't radiate down from upstairs and completely isolate the area with two short walls (insulate them too, if necessary). A tightly fitting, insulated door is also essential. Allow air to circulate as shown and, if your mini-root cellar doesn't have a dirt floor (for proper humidity control), keep a filled bucket of water in the storage area at all times. That's it. Bring in your harvest just before the first killing frost, try to maintain a humid storage temperature of 40 F. or less . . . and your carrots, onions, turnips, beets and other root crops should keep until spring, unless you eat them first!

Earth Almonds Edible Tubers

This spiky-leafed, yellow-flowered sedge grows all over the United States and Canada on rich waste and cultivated ground and in mud flats. The edible tubers (also called "earth almonds") that cling to the roots are gathered in late autumn or early spring.

"Nut grass" has been cultivated for food in Europe and the U.S., with good reason. Chufa tubers are highly nutritious, with a pleasantly nutty flavor, and can be eaten raw. More often, though, they're boiled . . . or well dried in a slow oven and ground into powder which can be used as a supplement to wheat flour. Or try roasting the tasty little morsels like chestnuts.

Chufa is also the source of a coffee substitute. Just clean the tubers, dry them well and over-roast them to an even brownness. Then grind the product and brew it in the usual way. (With the price of "real" coffee expected to soar, it's worthwhile to line up replacements.)

'Muggable Mary' Cited

NEW YORK (UPI)— They call her "Muggable Mary" and she has more than 250 felony arrests to her credit.

The 33-year-old policewoman joined the force in 1969, compiling the arrest record while operating in an anti-crime unit as a decoy.

The auburn-haired policewoman spends most of her tours of duty walking such areas as Times Square in the garb of a elderly woman with a cane or a visiting tourist, perhaps fresh from the Midwest.

At 5-foot-2 and 110 pounds, she makes an inviting target.

Nearby, however, is her backup team of four to six policemen, also dressed to blend in with the street crowd. She credits them with the fact that she has been injured in the line of duty only once, when a suspect bit her hand.

Doctor 'To Blame'

ENDERBY (CP) — A coroner's jury in this community 20 miles north of Vernon has ruled that Dr. K. A. Siluch of Kelowna, was to blame for an accident Sept. 28 that took the lives of two Powell River residents.

Frederick Barfield, 65, and his wife Florentina, 66, died in the head-on crash a few miles north of Enderby on highway 97.

The jury ruled that Dr. Siluch failed to keep proper control of his car and allowed it to enter the wrong lane.

Human Brain Pushed to Limits?

family

LONDON (UPI) — Society may be demanding more of the human brain than it can cope with, according to Prof. Ivor Mills of Cambridge University.

He thinks it is possible that some of the disturbing aspects of life today — the starvation phenomenon among girl students, the classroom misbehavior of juveniles—may be the result of people being pushed too close to the ultimate capacity of their brains.

"Can the brain go on indefinitely coping with new challenges or is there a limit?" he asked in an article in New Scientist.

One of the symptoms of this brain strain, he said, is a mild depression.

"Nowadays," he went on, "a number of children and young people have found that mild depression may be overcome by doing something exciting. This may be going to a pop concert with music at pain-producing intensity it may be challenging authority at home or it may involve stealing or other law-breaking activities.

"The more depressed they are, the more exciting the challenge has to be to mask their depression. Many of these young people have described the progressive increase in devilment that is necessary to stop feeling depressed. Producing an intense disturbance in class, in which the other children soon become involved, is a favorite and effective mechanism."

Mills said it has been known for a long time that starvation for about two weeks increases the speed and accuracy of mental processes, especially mental arithmetic.

"This," he said, "is probably the explanation of the huge increase in self-starvation in young women doing academic work. This condition in the extreme form known as anorexia nervosa, is now common and our studies have shown that in 75 per cent of the cases they started crash dieting in the year in which they were working for a major examination."

Mills said it all came down to this:

When problems in private life are associated with high demands at work or at school eventually the brain reaches a point at which it can no longer cope. In old-fashioned terms, a nervous breakdown occurs.

Many of the people who are driving themselves (to pass examinations or to gain promotion or to do two jobs to get more affluence) are helped by anti-depressants but there is a limit to how much these drugs can achieve.

"Sooner or later they have to learn to attempt less."

In the meantime, he said, science ought to begin an urgent investigation into what the mere act of living and functioning in a competitive society is doing to a brain perhaps not always equipped to handle ever increasing demands.

Cancer Hike Blamed On Estrogen

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The hormone estrogen, prescribed for women in menopause, is believed to be the cause of an estimated 35-percent increase noticed by California researchers in uterine cancer cases among affluent white women.

California tumor registry statistics indicated the uterine cancer rate rose to 41.4 cases per 100,000 population in 1973 from 27.2 cases per 100,000 in 1969.

Dr. Donald Austin, who heads the registry, said the statistics were based mainly on San Francisco, but a similar increase during the same period had been reported by the Connecticut tumor registry.

British High Society Woos Caroline Kennedy

NEWLYWEDS singer Eddie Fisher, 47, and Terry Richard, 21, pose for photographs after announcing they were married in Puertecito, Baja California October 29. Terry was the former Miss Louisiana in the 1973 Miss World contest.

LONDON — Undaunted by a terrorist bombing, Caroline Kennedy is having a wonderful time being 17, pretty and in with English society.

Her art appreciation studies at Sotheby's, the fine art auctioneers, are not so demanding as to preclude two all-night whirls in the last week with an assortment of wealthy young men, including Mark Shand, 24, whom the newspapers call her favorite.

Last week, after being shaken up by a terrorist blast outside her host's home in Kensington, Miss Kennedy was reported to have danced all night at a society wedding reception.

This week, she attended Lord and Lady Lambton's get-together of bluebloods and pop notables — of which fellow guest Andy Warhol remarked: "I haven't seen so many freaks for years."

Miss Kennedy was photographed dancing with Thomas Alexander Fermor-Hesketh, 25, the portly third baron of Hesketh, stately homeowner, motor-racing sponsor and one of England's most eligible bachelors. Another partner was Johathan Guinness of Ireland's Guinness brewing family.

Shand, who has not comment on his relationship with Miss Kennedy, was also there.

SAN FRANCISCB — Physical culturist Jack Lalanne, handcuffed and shackled, but using a breathing apparatus, Thursday swam underwater across the mouth of San Francisco Bay under the Golden Gate bridge, towing a 2,000-pound boat.

Playing one-upmanship with his age, he was celebrating his 61st birthday which occurred about a month ago.

"This is the most exciting thing of my life," he said standing under the south tower of the bridge. "It just gets better and better. I never think of age."

Lalanne swam the 1½ miles in one hour 57 minutes. Upon reaching shore, he performed 10 quick pushups.

NEW YORK — An ornate, gold-plated licence plate used on the parade limousines of Adolf Hitler and his mistress, Eva Braun, was sold at auction Thursday night for $3,500.

A spokesman for Charles Hamilton Galleries, which conducted the auction, said the plate, which bears the words "Reichskanzler Deutschland" — chancellor of Germany — formerly sat on Hitler's parade limousine.

NEW YORK — Lionel Trilling, author, educator and literary critic, died at home Wednesday of cancer. He was 70.

Trilling had been a member of the Columbia University faculty for 44 years, achieving the rarely awarded rank of university professor.

LONDON — British actress Glenda Jackson, winner of two Oscars, is being sued for divorce by her husband, director Roy Hodges.

Miss Jackson, 39, won her Oscars for Women in Love and A Touch of Class. She has been married to Hodges for 18 years.

NEW YORK—Pearly Bailey says she is quitting show business after 40 years to do "God's work."

"I must turn to God's work, singing in hospitals or something like that," she told a tear-filled Broadway audience Thursday night on the opening night of her return performance as Dolly Levi in "Hello, Dolly!" With a hushed cast behind her, she bade farewell to New York first-nighters with "I'll Take Manhattan."

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Steven Soliah, who lived with Patricia Hearst, returns to court today to face federal charges of robbery and murder in connection with a Symbionese Liberation Army bank holdup.

Reckless Driving Cited

Reckless driving and excessive speed led to a single-car accident which resulted in the death of a 16-year-old boy Sept. 25, a young survivor of the mishap told a coroner's jury Wednesday.

In a statement read to the jury Malcolm Berge, 14, said the car had been driven at speeds of 70 and 80, 'maybe even 90 miles an hour before it swerved off Brookleigh Road near Elk Lake and plunged 100 feet down a grassy embankment.

Passenger Matthew Riel was dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital at 2:40 a.m. that morning. Driver John Thomas received severe leg injuries and is still in traction in hospital.

All three boys lived at the human resources group home at 522 Rupert and Berge said they had snuck out for an early morning ride in the car which he had believed Thomas had borrowed.

He later found out the car had been stolen the previous night from a parking lot at the rear of a nearby apartment at 999 Heywood. The owner was Patricia Ellis.

Berge said he woke up after the accident to find "my feet dripping with blood." He ran to the nearest house and summoned help.

He said before the crash Thomas had been driving recklessly doing "donuts" which he described as high speed skid turns on one spot.

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre adjjourned the inquest to Jan. 7 when it is expected Thomas will be well enough to testify.

Plant Blows Up

BEEK, Netherlands (Reuter) — Fifteen workers were reported missing and at least 25 injured, five seriously, in an explosion at a Dutch state mines chemical plant here today, a company spokesman said. The explosion caused a huge blaze, with flames leaping 100 feet into the air. The blast shattered windows of stores, houses and schools in this small town.

13% Hike Limit On School Budget

Greater Victoria school board decided Thursday to limit school budget increases to 13 per cent; but the self-imposed ceiling may not prompt widespread teacher layoffs.

Chairman Bill Ross said the 15 per cent ceiling for community college increases, set recently by Education Minister Eileen Dailly is "too high and doesn't call for enough restraint" in these woeful economic times.

For that reason he rejected the 14.97 per cent increase calculated as necessary by the board administration to maintain the status quo.

Ross suggested the 13 per cent limit after a three-hour wrangling session which at times could be compared to a round-table poker session as trustees made their ceiling bids and had them rejected, upped, or dismissed by their benchmates.

Ross said the 13 per cent increase to last year's $40.7 million budget is subject to review after provisional budgets are submitted to the provincial government.

At that time teacher salary settlements, basic education grants and details of the federal wage and price guidelines will be known.

The ceiling means that if teachers on staff get the highest salary settlement allowable under federal guidelines, teachers may have to be laid off.

But figures for this year indicate that some 148 teachers left the district through attrition, including 41 who obtained a leave of absence and will have to be placed back in the system next year.

The board urged that teachers keep budget restrictions in mind during salary negotiations and decide whether salaries stay high or the number of students per teacher increases.

"Let's leave it up to the consciences of the professionals to decide where they want to go," suggested Dr. Mark Fisher.

The budget ceiling would mean that instead of pupil teacher ratio of 19 to 1, there may theoretically be 21 students per teacher, an increase, according to trustee Peter Bunn, that is "surely one way to get at the guts of the guidelines."

While trustees discussed the pros and cons of the 14.97 per cent figure mentioned by administration, Bunn consistently recommended that a 10 per cent increase was the "reasonable figure."

"Don't let's go bankrupt that's all I'm saying. People out there are not willing to take more than a 10 per cent increase."

He was mollified, however, when wording in the motion said budget increase was "not to exceed 13 per cent," meaning ceiling could be lower.

Jury Trial Elected By Policeman

MOOSE JAW (CP) — An eight-year veteran of the Moose Jaw police force elected trial by judge and jury when he appeared for preliminary hearing on a charge of criminal negligence.

Ken Haggerty, 27, was charged in the death Oct. 5 of Wayne Kolisnek, 18, of Moose Jaw.

The youth died in hospital after being wounded in the head by a bullet fired from a police revolver following a high-speed car chase.

Police said Haggerty approached the car with his revolver drawn. When Kolisnek opened the door of the car, the gun discharged.

Haggerty was suspended from the force and released on $5,000 bail.

Crown prosecutor Chad Musk of the attorney-general's office in Regina has asked for morning and afternoon sessions for the hearing which is expected to conclude today.

WAX RACQUEL ABDUCTED FROM TORONTO MUSEUM

TORONTO — A life-size wax model of Hollywood sex goddess Racquel Welch, wearing a gold lame jumpsuit, is missing from the Toronto was museum. The model was discovered missing Thursday when the museum opened.

"When we left last night, she was right between Martin Luther King and Albert Einstein, but I guess they weren't any competition," said museum manager David Ridsdale.

The figure weighs about 80 pounds and "she's worth about $2,000 to us," Ridsdale said.

For the one we loved so dearly
Has forever been called away.
—Always remembered by his loving Family and his wife Alice.

STANCIL—In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Robert Alfred Stancil, who entered into eternal life Nov. 7, 1973.
There's an open gate at the end of the road
Through which each must go alone,
And there, in a light we cannot see,
Our Father claims his own;
Beyond the gate our loved one
Finds happiness and rest,
And there is comfort in the thought,
That a Loving God knows best
He has not gone, our dear beloved,
Nor has he wandered far.
Just stepped into God's loveliest room
—Remembered always. Wife Lillian and daughter Barbara.

STANCIL—In loving memory of our dear brother-in-law Robert A. Stancil, who passed away Nov. 7, 1971.
His memory is our keepsake,
With which we will never part,
God has it in his keeping
We have it in our hearts
A cheery smile, a heart of gold.
He suffered much, but never told,
'Till God above knew what was best.
He took him home and gave him rest.
—Remembered always. Your Sisters-in-law, Dorothy Grexton and Mabel Stenseth and family.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

Lilies Not Necessarily White

The true lilies for the garden come in a great variety of shapes, sizes and colors.

Some of us think of lilies as being white and having trumpet shaped flowers, but a study of any current bulb list will show orange, yellow, red, lilac-pink, mauve, purple as well as white among the colors.

Shapes are like small cups, open bowls and Turk's caps with reflexed petals, as well as the conventional trumpet shapes.

Heights range from rock garden sizes to giants of 10 feet or more.

The species and hybrids grown today in Canada and the United States must number in the hundreds; some are difficult in average garden soils, others are easy.

One requirement for all lilies is a well drained soil. The lily is a scaly bulb like an onion and similarly needs a fertile sandy or loamy soil with enough humus to maintain water supplies at root level in summer yet not remain saturated in winter.

Lily bulbs are usually only available for purchase in November by which time some gardeners are not inclined to do their planting.

Yet this lateness in the season offers the chance of being reasonably sure in choosing the best spot in the garden. No gardener will dig the required 10 to 12 inches down and drop lily (or any other) bulbs in if water has collected at the bottom of the hole.

Apart from winter drainage and a humus-rich sandy loam, nearly all lilies prefer shade over the root area and sunshine for stems and flowers. This suggests their being planted on the north side of low-growing spreading shrubs that do not have spreading roots.

When lily bulbs are bought they have no roots unless you are lucky enough to get locally grown bulbs. In either case, plan to get them into the ground at once. The bulb scales must be firm and the bulbs plump and heavy for their size. Whether they are large or small is of little importance; in faet small bulbs often establish more readily than large ones without roots.

To induce quick rooting, place at least six inches of sandy compost below each bulb, still remembering you want the top of the bulb to be about 12 inches below soil level.

This depth is required for all stem-rooting lilies, but not for those which are base-rooting only. Get the specific name and this depth preference when you buy the bulbs.

Some lily bulbs apparently die after producing a stem of flowers the first summer after planting. The reason can be traced to a lack of roots. The flower stem has grown at the expense of the bulb and nothing remains to nourish the bulb for another year's flowers.

To avoid this, let the leafy stem grow to around 18 inches and when the green flower buds can be seen, nip them out. This reduces the drain on the bulb and at the same time encourages it to make more fleshy roots.

Once established, growing and flowering well, most lily bulbs will increase well if left undisturbed.

Should the soil be quite unsuited for planting when you get the bulbs, put each one into a large pot of sandy soil and keep in the coolest place you can find that is free of frost. In early spring, transplant without root disturbance into the prepared place. Occasional small amounts of water may be needed to prevent the soil from becoming dust dry during winter. But never have it wet.

Still prevent flowering the first year for best results.

Lilies are lovely in appearance and most scent the garden with their heady perfume. Many of the new hybrids are reasonably easy to grow and increase in the garden with the years.

'Fine-Tuning' Of Guides Eyed

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Donald Macdonald today announced amendments to the government's anti-inflation bill that would allow it to vary regulations for specific industries or groups within industries.

Included in amendments presented to the Commons finance committee dealing with the proposed legislation, was a change which would allow guides to be applied to a particular class of companies, employees or dividends.

A finance department official said this will allow the government to "fine-tune the regulations, apply different mechanisms to different industries where conditions may be different."

He said such variation would have to remain within the spirit of the program—which generally limits wage increases to 10 per cent in the first year, restricts price increases to the amount needed to cover additional costs and freezes dividend payments for one year at the level existing on Oct. 14.

Mr. Macdonald told the committee additional amendments may be introduced before the legislation is passed, depending on representations by various groups.

Other amendments introduced today clarify the roles of the anti-inflation board, which investigates suspected violations of the guides, and the administrator. The administrator is responsible for rectifying a situation or imposing penalties.

Mr. Macdonald said the intention is to have the administrator act without repeating the investigation already conducted by the board.

The board also would be required to report to the minister any recommendations made to the administrator, and this report would have to be presented to the Commons. Reports on the actions of the administrator, who has not yet been named, already were required by the bill to be tavled in the Commons.

Another amendment would limit the appointment of anti-inflation board chairman JeanLuc Pepin to three years —the initial time-span of the program—rather than four years, as originally provided.

However, any inquiry or proceeding begun while the program was in force would continue after the program had been suspended. The board chairman or others involved would continue to hold their jobs as long as necessary to complete such action.

The guides also apply to the income increases of professionals, such as doctors and lawyers, unless the rise results from an increased work load.

The professions generally are regulated by the provinces and Mr. Macdonald said the provinces and the federal government will establish "appropriate billing bases." Professionals would have to file a statement of their income with the anti-inflation board at income tax time, he said.

$87M In Loans To Mexico

THUNDER BAY, Ont. (CP) — Don C. Jamieson, industry, trade and commerce minister, has announced that the Export Development Corp. (EDC) will make loans of about $87 million to Mexico to support the sale of Canadian railway equipment, locomotives and rolling stock.

The agreement was signed by John A. MacDonald, EDC president, and Dr. G. R. Kolbeck, president of Nacional Financiera S.A., a firm which manages foreign credits for Mexican national development.

The loans include about $51 million to support the sale of 200 railway passenger cars to be made in Thunder Bay by Canadian Car, a unit of Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd.

A loan for $36 million includes support for the sale of 300 tank cars and 200 hopper cars by Hawker's Trenton, N.S., plant. Part of this loan, about $10 million, involves the sale of locomotive spare parts from MLW-Worthington Ltd. of Montreal and 50,000 tons of steel rails by Sydney Steel Corp. of Sydney, N.S.

Atco-Arab Deal

CALGARY (CP) — Atco Industries Ltd. of Calgary has announced that it has secured the largest single contract in its history — from the Saudi Arabia government-controlled Arabian American Oil Company Aramco. Together with the $30-million-plus contract to build 3,000 to 4,000 industrial housing modules to be shipped to Saudi Arabia, the company will hire 1,250 workers in Calgary, Montreal and Riverside, Calif., a company spokesman said.

Schulz Allows No Adults In Peanuts Comic Strip

By CHARLES M. SCHULZ

This is the fifth of five articles excerpted from the book "Peanuts Jubilee, My Life And Art With Charlie Brown And Others," published by Holt, Rinehart and Winston.

Because of the postal strike a number of favorite comics are missing for this week, but they'll be resumed when alternative delivery methods take effect.

If Peanuts has been unique in any way, it has been because of the absence of adults. I usually say that they do not appear because the daily strip is only an inch and a half high, and they wouldn't have room to stand up.

Actually, they have been left out because they would intrude in a world where they could only be uncomfortable. Adults are not needed in the Peanuts strip. They are talked about but never seen or heard.

Charlie Brown's father seems to be a gentle soul who is developing a few problems. Charlie Brown once said that he saw him in the kitchen late one night, looking at his high-school annual, eating cold cereal and looking very sad. This would say something about almost every one of us.

Linus's blanket-hating grandmother has caused a good deal of trouble for poor Linus, because she seems to be convinced that she can cure him of his terrible habit of having to drag around this spiritual blotter. When he knows that she is coming over to their house to visit, and realizing it is impossible to hide his blanket from her, he tucks it into a self-addressed envelope and drops it into the mail, knowing it will not come back for at least four days.

I don't suppose a person has to be too psychologically observant to notice that boys play a more predominant role in Peanuts than do girls. I have always been self-conscious about this but, after all, I know more about the suffering of little boys growing up than I do about the suffering of little girls.

I have tried, however, to balance the characters in the strip, but it has only been recently that I have been able to do stories which were predominately about the girls.

I think the best of all was the one concerning ear-piercing. Whenever I become involved in a story like this, I do enough research to make it authentic. Phone calls to several physicians enabled me to find out the problems of having one's ears pierced and to obtain the opinions of doctors as to the advisability of the operation. It was a successful series and one which I enjoyed as much as any.

It took several years for me to develop the knack of presenting short stories. I was already using themes and variations, but I believe it was the story of Charlie Brown getting his kite caught in the tree that started me off on these stories. He was so mad that he said he was going to stand beneath the tree, holding onto the string and not move for the rest of his life.

I then had the other characters come up to him one by one each day and either say dumb things to him or something which would prompt him to answer in a sarcastic manner. It was a brief episode, but it did attract some attention, and, I believe, new readers.

Since then I have tried to use stories frequently. I find it a good way to think of ideas because once a story gets going all sorts of little episodes come to mind.

I don't know which story has been my favorite, but one that worked out far beyond my expectations concerned Charlie Brown's problem when, instead of seeing the sun rise early one morning, he saw a huge baseball come up over the horizon.

Eventually a rash, similar to the stitching on a baseball, began to appear on his head, and his pediatrician told him it would be a good idea if he went off to camp and got some rest. Because he was embarrassed by the rash, he decided to wear a sack over his head. The first day of camp, all of the boys held a meeting and someone jokingly nominated the kid with the sack over his head as camp president.

Before he knew it, Charlie Brown was running the camp and had the admiration of everyone. It seemed that no matter what he did, it turned out well, and he became known as "Sack" or "Mr. Sack," and became the best-liked and most admired kid in camp.

Unfortunately, he could not resist taking the sack off to see if his rash was cured and, once he had removed the sack, he reverted back to his old self. I don't pretend there is any great truth to this story, or any marvelous moral, but it was a neat little tale.

The longest series I have ever done involved Peppermint Patty and her ice-skating competition. I was able to stretch it out because I was able to go in several directions.

First, there was the matter of her having to practice and of her involvement with he ice-skating pro, who was Snoopy. Then there was the making of her skating dress, as she talked little Marcie, against her will, into making the dress for her. I think this story went on for five weeks and, of course, ended in disaster for Peppermint Patty, because the ice-skating competition for which she had prepared so diligently turned out to be a roller-skating competition instead!

Even after 25 years, I still enjoy going to work each day, though friends who know me well can testify to the fact that I never use the term "work." If I have to say that I will not be free to do something on a certain day, I will always put it: "I have to go to the studio and draw funny pictures."

It could be a superstition, but I guess it is really that I don't want anyone to think that what I do is that much work. It is one of the few situations in my life where I feel totally secure.

When I sit behind the drawing board, I feel that I am in command. I am comfortable in my studio and I am reasonably proud of many of the things that I have drawn. I think that I have done my share toward contributing to the advancement of my profession and this also makes me feel proud.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

One of the advantages of studying books on play is that the student becomes familiar with many standard, recurring types of situations. Thus, when he is confronted with one of them at the table, he is spared the time and trouble of working it out.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♥ Q J 9 3
♦ J 9 6 2
♣ A 3

WEST	EAST
♠ 8 6 3 2	♠ Q J 9 4
♥ 7 4	♥ 8 6 5 2
♦ K 8	♦ 7 5 4
♣ K J 9 6 4	♣ Q 7

SOUTH
♥ A K 10
♦ A Q 10 3
♣ 10 8 5 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♦	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♣.

North and South were employing the Stayman Convention. North's two-club bid asked South to name a four-card major suit, if he had one. The two-diamond response denied possession of a four-card major.

West's six of clubs opening lead was taken promptly by dummy's ace. The nine of diamonds was laid down next, and the finesse taken, losing to West's king. West was now stymied. If he cashed the club king, he would fell his partner's queen; and, simultaneously, promote South's ten-spot into a stopper. If West led a low club instead, East would win the trick with the queen — but he would have no club to play back.

Had declarer played low from dummy on the opening club lead, he would have gone down. In this case East's queen would have won the trick, and a club return would have driven out the board's ace. West, upon obtaining the lead with his king of diamonds, would then have cashed three club tricks.

Declarer's play of the club ace at trick one had to be correct. If the adversely held clubs were divided 4-3, South would lose only three club tricks whether he took the ace or didn't. The worry was that West possessed five clubs.

If the latter were the setup, then East had either the doubleton K-x, the Q-x, or the J-x, since West would not have led the six-spot (as his fourth-highest) from an original holding of K-Q-J-x-x. Hence, by putting up the club ace at trick one, South knew that East would now have remaining either the singleton king, queen, or jack; and that the defenders, if they obtained the lead, would be unable to cash four club tricks. South's play of the club ace "blocked" the club suit.

Workers Won't See Gov't Wage Offer

OTTAWA — Canadian Union of Postal Workers president Joe Davidson said today 22,000 striking inside employees would not get to see the government's latest wage offer because it just wasn't enough.

"The executive board decided unanimously that the government offer was so far from the members' contractual demands it just wasn't worth presenting," said Davidson.

Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey insisted Thursday that talks to end the 18-day mail strike be discontinued so the CUPW leadership could show the money package to its members and let them decide what to do with it.

Mackasey said the offer of $1.70 an hour over 30 months was a fair agreement and the best he could do.

The offer was recommended six weeks ago by a three-man conciliation board headed by Quebec Justice Jean Moisin, the unanimous choice of both sides to head the panel.

The same increase was accepted by 82 per cent of Canada's 18,000 letter carriers last April.

"The Moisin report was no good six weeks ago and it certainly is not good enough today," Davidson said.

The union leader said CUPW was anxious to resume negotiations at any time.

"We didn'e break off talks, Mackasey did," said Davidson. "As soon as he's ready to begin bargaining again, we'll be there."

The union has demanded a 51 per cent increase of $2.73 an hour on a two year contract and wants the men paid for their lunch hour each day. CUPW members now earn $4.59 an hour.

Prime Minister Trudeau told the Commons today government will not legislate an end to the strike at this stage.

Trudeau, pressed by Progressive Conservative MPs, said the government's present attitude does not preclude intervention to end the strike at a later date.

Toronto members of CUPW are reported exerting pressure for a return to work after the breakdown in negotiations.

Officers of the 4,500-member local have scheduled a membership meeting for Saturday, the newspaper says.

Lou Murphy, president of the Toronto local, has refused to speak to reporters until after a meeting today of the local executive.

Jim Harris, public relations officer for the Halifax Post Office, also said the post office will accept any striking CUPW members who decide to return to work.

—The contract would be for 30 months, retroactive to Jan. 1 and ending June 30, 1977.

—The total wage increase would be $1.70 an hour. It would begin with a 70-cent increase retroactive to Jan. 1, followed by 30 cents retroactive to July 1; 40 cents next Jan. 1; and 30 cents next July 1.

—A cost-of-living adjustment effective next Jan. 1 would pay one cent an hour for each full four-tenths of a point increase in the cost-of-living index up to a maximum of 60 cents an hour when the contract expires. The cost-of-living bonus would be paid quarterly beginning next April.

—Weekend premiums for each regularly-scheduled hour worked would be increased to 75 cents on Sundays and 60 cents on Saturdays. Shift premiums for evening and night shifts would be increased to

Economic Damage Warned

By PETER THOMSON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Bank of Canada Governor Gerald Bouey Thursday issued a new warning that Canada is in serious economic trouble.

Testifying before the Commons Finance Committee Bouey declared: "It has now become absolutely essential to bring inflation under control in this country if we are to avoid major economic and social damage."

Controlling inflation offers the only realistic hope of achieving a sound economic recovery, he added.

Bouey told the committee that no one should have any doubt what is involved in bringing inflation under control. "We will find ourselves better off, not worse off as many seem to think."

Canada's costs and prices have continued to spiral upwards very rapidly despite more than a year of recession and a more prolonged and severe recession in the outside world.

Two years ago what was happening to prices in Canada was part of a worldwide phenomenon.

"More recently, however, the trend of costs and prices in a number of the main countries with which we trade has clearly begun to moderate," Bouey warned. "To an increasing extent continuing rapid inflation in Canada is now a special problem of our own."

OTTAWA (CP) — After a one-month respite, the cost of living rose sharply in October mainly because of higher prices for shelter and food, Statistics Canada reported today.

The consumer price index in October was at 142.8. Stated another way, this means a basket of consumer items that could be brought for $100 in 1971 cost $142.80 last month. The same basket cost $141.50 in September and $129.10 a year ago.

The purchasing power of a 1971 dollar had dropped to 70 cents by September.

The sharp October rise of nine-tenths of one per cent is a return to the situation which existed during the summer months. Between June and August, the consumer price index jumped almost four per cent. The September increase moderated to two-tenths of one per cent, mainly because food prices were lower.

In October, all the major components of the index, including food, moved higher.

There are still some affects from government-approved increases in energy costs to be reflected in the index.

Freezes in gasoline prices for Ontario and Manitoba residents end Nov. 15. These were imposed to protect consumers against a $1.50-a-barrel rise in domestic crude oil prices approved earlier this year. Ontario residents will pay 5.4 cents a gallon more for gasoline when the price freeze is lifted.

Higher domestic crude prices, plus the 10-cents-a-gallon federal excise tax on gasoline, will eventually add between one and one-half and two percentage points to the consumer price index, Statistics Canada estimates.

About half the October living costs rise occurred because shelter costs were higher. An average 13-per-cent rise in annual residential property taxes was the main reason.

But in addition, food prices started to move up again after some declines in September. Beef and pork prices were higher as were prices for fresh vegetables, coffee, canned salmon and restaurant meals.

There were some seasonal bargains for fresh fruit to offset these rises, as well as lower sugar prices. But overall, food costs were 12 per cent higher last month than a year ago.

Besides food and shelter, local transit fares jumped to 50 cents a ticket from 35 cents in Montreal, many municipalities raised water rates and professional fees for dental care were raised. Several provinces increased prices for alcholic beverages.

In Paris the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development reported today that Canada and Austria had the smallest increases in consumer prices in the major non-Communist countries in September.

The OECD said consumer prices in the industrial countries rose 0.7 per cent on average in September compared with 0.4 per cent in August.

The 24 OECD member states recorded September inflation rates ranging from four per cent in Greece to 0.2 per cent in Austria and Canada.

Bourassa Eyes Site Takeover

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec government is considering taking over construction of facilities for the 1976 Olympic Games, according to La Presse.

In a front-page story from Quebec City, the newspaper says Premier Robert Bourassa will decide on government action within five days following meetings with officials of the City of Montreal and the Games organizing committee.

The premier is scheduled to meet Mayor Jean Drapeau and Gerard Niding, chairman of the city's executive committee, during the weekend, the newspaper quotes government sources as saying.

Government spokesmen were reported as saying Quebec may announce the takeover of Games construction when the City of Montreal asks for an additional $200-million loan to help finance Olympic projects. The request is expected soon.

Opposition critics say a further loan would bring the city's total financial involvement with the Games to $812 million.

Cancer Toll Rising

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — People died of cancer at a higher rate in the first seven months of 1975 than at any time since the U.S. government began gathering such statistics 42 years ago, monthly data gathered by the National Centre for Health Statistics show.

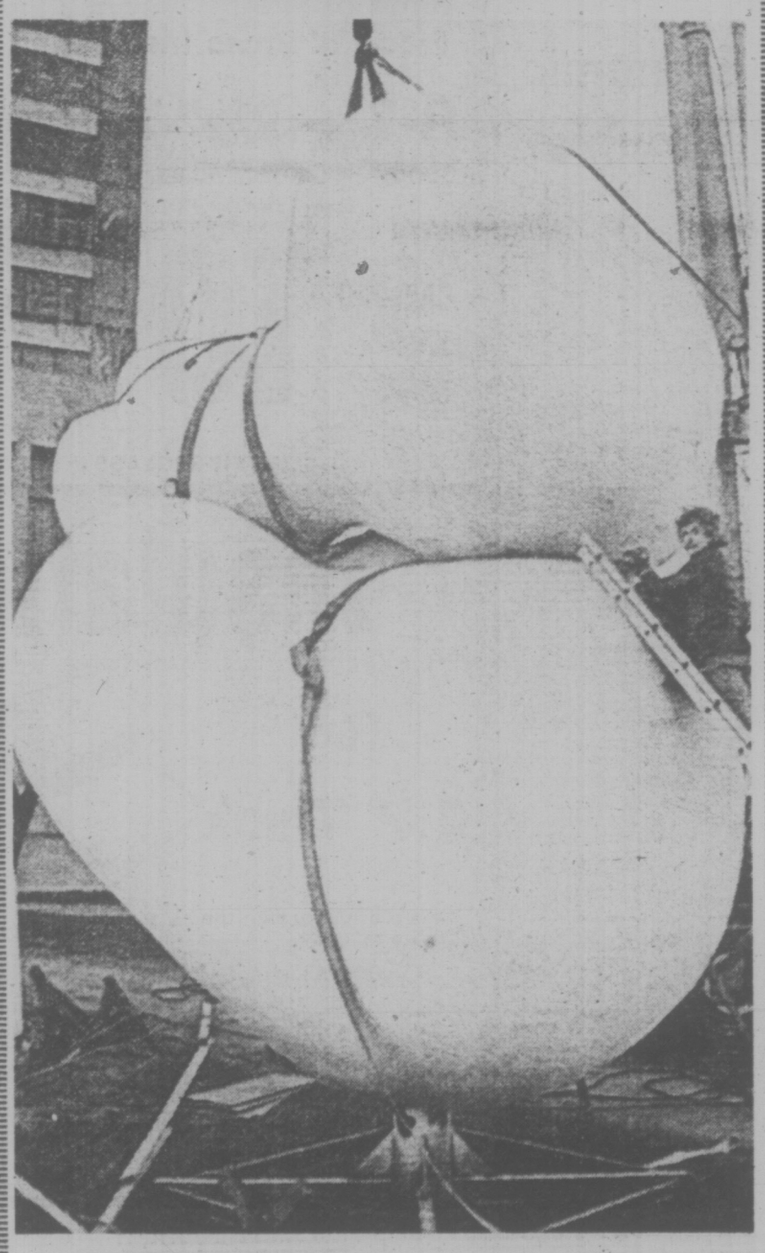
The National Cancer Institute said Thursday it could not explain the 5.22 per cent increase this year despite the fact that more people are surviving the illness.

In 1933 — the first year for which comprehensive data are available — 105.9 persons per 100,000 died of cancer. By the end of 1974 the figure was 169.5. As of last July 31, it was 176.3.

The cancer death rate has gone up about 1 per cent annually since 1933.

In 1932, for unexplained reasons, there were 1.9 per cent more deaths than in the previous year, but in the next 20 years deaths kept increasing at the 1 per cent rate.

THIS IS LOVE?



Montreal sculptor Henry Jones spent today glueing together the pieces of his sculpture known as Love in front of the Place du Portage in Hull. Two weeks ago, Jones refused to put the pieces together until the Public Works Department, which has already paid cut more than $70,000 for the art work, gave him more money. He backed down after the government threatened to enforce terms of a contract signed in the middle of 1974 which, it said, made assembling the statue Jones' responsibility.

MP Needn't Declare Trust Fund

OTTAWA (CP) — Claude Wagner (PC — St. Hyacinthe) who acknowledged Tuesday that he has accepted money from private donors since 1972 to supplement his parliamentary income, is not required to declare any of it under the Election Expenses Act.

John Dewis, assistant Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, said Thursday that officially-declared candidates for federal office are not required to file financial statements 60 days after the date they have been declared elected or unelected, under terms of the Act.

"Any funds received as a contribution or used as expenses during an election campaign must be presented in a financial statement within 60 days after any candidate has been declared elected. There are no other provisions for the declaration of income," Dewis said.

Wagner, expected to be a major candidate for the national Progressive Conservative leadership, said earlier the arrangement is "above board" and he has no reason to be ashamed.

$1M Ransom Girls Found Buried Alive

BURNABY — Two teen-age girls spent five days buried in a bunker the size of a grave before being discovered by RCMP following a massive five-day secret investigation.

A 22-year-old Malaysian student has been charged with kidnapping them and demanding a $1 million ransom.

Monica Gunawan and Mrs. Shianita Layarda, both 19-year-old students, were discovered in a dugout six feet by two feet and three feet deep under the concrete floor of a garage at the rear of a house on Ferndale in East Vancouver.

You Sooi Tan appeared in Burnaby provincial court this morning charged with kidnapping.

Finding the two women alive and the arrest brought to an end a massive five-day investigation involving about 100 RCMP members from the Lower Mainland and B.C. Tel staff working in strict secrecy.

"We thought publicity would jeopardize the girls' lives," said Insp. Cy Thomas head of Burnaby RCMP.

When police broke through the concrete garage floor, the girls lay there weak and terrified, a police spokesman said.

"We had some difficulty making them believe we were their saviors and that we hadn't come to kill them," said Sergeant Bill Howitt. "The first thing they saw was a group of big men armed with shotguns."

The women were last heard from at Miss Gunawan's home in Burnaby on Saturday.

Police said that on Sunday, Miss Gunawan's brother, Suhaeri, received a telephone call saying the girls had been kidnapped and would be released when a $1 million ransom was paid.

Police said that Miss Gunawan's father owns a steel and engineering firm and a motorcycle assembly plant in Jakarta, and Miss Layarda's fa-

Hawrelak Dies

EDMONTON (CP) — Mayor William Hawrelak, one of Alberta's most controversial civic officials, died early today in University Hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack. Dr. John Reid, the hospital's medical director, said Hawrelak, 59, died at 7:20 a.m.

INQUIRY ORDERED INTO 32-DEATH CRASH

OTTAWA (CP) — A public inquiry will be held into the 32-death crash of a Panarctic Oils Ltd. aircraft at Rea Point, N.W.T., a year ago, Justice Minister Ron Basford said today.

The minister said in the Commons that he will soon announce terms of reference for the inquiry and a commissioner.

Basford said he was making the order for the inquiry after considering recommendations by a coroner's inquest into the deaths of 32 of the 34 crew and passengers aboard the ill-fated flight.

He had also considered the importance of air safety in the North.

A transport department investigation concluded that pilot error was largely responsible for the crash but the pilot's wife and sister have disputed some of the findings of the investigators. The pilot was Brian Thomson of Leduc, Alta.

Mobile Home Controls Urged

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Mobile homes or "manufactured housing" will soon account for over half the new hosing in B.C. and thus should be treated like conventional homes, according to a government report released today.

The 179-page report presented by special consultant Michael Audain shows 44,000 B.C. households living in mobile homes today and predicts more and more people will move to the cheaper form of housing.

"Within 10 years stick-built detached homes will only be built for people able to afford unique architectural designs," said the report, commissioned by Premier Barrett last May.

In public hearings attended by 1,700 people around the province Audain said he found the construction quality of mobile homes needs to be improved and residents generally feel victimized by entrance and exit fees levied by park operators.

He made 45 recommendations for bringing mobile home builders, salesmen and park operators under government regulation through the department of housing and the Rentalsman's office.

They include:

—Tightening up inspection standards at mobile home plants;

—Much stricter fire safety regulations including provision of secondary escape routes from bedrooms, fire-resistant furnace containers and fire detection alarm systems required by July 1, 1976;

—Restricting the sale of all second-hand homes to licensed real estate agents.

The report said park owners should not be allowed to solicit money as a condition of renting a space and any tenant who has already paid an entrance fee should have it returned by deducting it from monthly rental charges.

Park owners should also not be allowed to restrict the sale of units in their park or be able to take a percentage of the sale value.

No park owner should be able to restrict his park to units sold by any one mobile home dealer and the report recommends the Rentalsman have jurisdiction over disputes between tenant and park owners on park regulations.

The government's new Savings and Trust Corporation should provide loans to park developers in northern and other remote areas of the province and should set up mortgage programs for purchasers.

Kidnapped Girls Rescued

Police said that a man arrived at Miss Gunawan's home on Saturday, told them he was a policeman, then drove them to the garage. They said the man told the women that the small concrete lid covering the bunker was wired with explosives which would be detonated if they tried to escape.

Police said the women were supplied with food during their ordeal.

They said the man told the women he was part of a San Francisco organization that would kill the women if the ransom was not paid, however, police said they have discounted this statement.

The garage where the two girls were held was located in the back yard of a three-bedroom home rented by seven Malaysian students, including Tan.

One of the residents, 20-year-old Charles Wong of Sibu, Malaysia told reporters "we had no idea the girls were in the garage." He said the seven students moved into the rented home about six weeks ago.

Wong said Tan "couldn't find a room anywhere else, so he came with us. He seldom talked about himself and we did not know much about him."

Wong said he called police last Saturday when he suspected someone had been around a garage where the girls were found Thursday.

40 cents an hour. All shift and weekend premiums would be applied equally to part time and fulltime workers.

—Vacations would be set at three weeks for employees with up to 14 years of service; four weeks after 14 years; and five weeks after 27 years. Vacation pay for part-time employees would be set at four per cent of earnings for up to 14 years, six per cent after 27 years.

—Overtime would be at time-and-a-half for regular days. Overtime hours worked on days of rest or an holidays would be paid at double time, in addition to regular holiday pay.

Striking inside postal workers in Halifax were permanently enjoined today from interfering with the operations of Emergency Courier Service but told they could have up to three of their members on hand near the service to disseminate information.

Mr. Justice J. L. Dubinsky of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court secured an agreement on the number of strikers who could be present from lawyers for CUPW and the courier service which was set up by jobless letter carriers last week.

All sides steered sharply away from identifying the three as pickets, after agreeing that picketing against somebody with whom one has no employer-employee relationship is illegal under Canadian law.

Economic Trouble

Making a strong argument in favor of the government's wage and price restraint program, Bouey added that Canada can no longer count on being able to reduce unemployment simply by taking sufficiently strong measures to raise internal demand for goods and services.

"There is a very real risk that further stimulation of demand . . . would serve mainly to fuel still higher inflation.

"As a result, unemployment would remain high; conceivably it could go still higher," Bouey warned the committee.

He added that there is no way of bringing inflation under control quickly except at a very heavy cost in lost job opportunities and foregone output.

To rely on money supply and budget policies alone to slow down the rate of inflation might take a very long time to succeed in view of the present high rates of increase in prices and money incomes.

However, Bouey said, he did believe monetary and fiscal restraint could work if it is supplemented by an effective program of price and income restraints.

The governor of the central bank noted that inflation had sprung from expansionary monetary and fiscal policies of the early 1970s in almost all of the world's industrial countries, including Canada.

Victoria: Jobless Peaking

High levels of unemployment in southern Vancouver Island appear to have peaked, and indications are for a rising number of jobs, Canada Manpower manager Stan Purdy said today.

The opinion is based on findings of agency's economist and current trends of regional employment.

Available jobs in Greater Victoria are expected to grow at a rate of three per cent during the next 12 months, Purdy said in his report for October.

Job activity has been high despite the high provincial and national levels of unemployment, exceeding expectations of those businesses and industries contributing to the report, Purdy said.

Construction demands are high and laid-off workers are being recalled to forest and manufacturing jobs as pre-holiday retailing prospects appear bright.

Purdy said the market would absorb those who are at present unemployed, but at the same time he indicated the possibility of slackening in the construction trades because of the absence of tendering for major projects that will show up in the new year.

the weather

The front that produced stormy conditions on the west coast Thursday has now moved off to Alberta. In its wake cool unstable air covers all of British Columbia. Most interior locations will experience some snowflurry activity today. Rainshowers will be general along the coast although the sun will probably manage to peek through the clouds occasionally. With the cool conditions the showers will fall in the form of snow at elevations above 3,000 feet. Isolated thundershowers are also likely at a few localities on the south coast today.

Toronto Prices Sharply Higher

Moore gained ⅞ to $47¼, Canadian Industries ¾ to $19½, Toronto Dominion Bank ¾ to $35, Northern Electric ⅝ to $25 and Canadian Tire A ⅝ to $43½.

Dylex A fell ⅛ to $5½, Texasgulf ½ to $30⅝¼, Hudson Bay Mining A ½ to $16¾, Patino ½ to $9¼ and Pan-Canadian Pete ¼ to $16⅛.

New York

But gainers held a slight over-all edge on losers at New York.

Trading was moderately active.

On the plus side, New York's First National City Bank lowered its prime lending rate for the third week in a row, cutting the key rate on corporate loans to 7¼ from 7½ per cent.

But the sluggishness in the money supply also seemed to raise questions over the availability of funds to fuel a substantial economic recovery in the months ahead.

The U.S. labor department's report of an increase in the unemployment rate last month sounded another cautious note for the market. And analysts said investors still were trying to puzzle out the eventual outcome and impact of New York City's financial problems.

Texaco was the most active issue on the NYSE, down ⅜ at $23. A 250,000-share block traded at that price.

Montreal

Prices were higher in moderate trading today at Montreal.

Volume at 2:30 p.m. EST was 388,700 shares, compared with 433,900 shares traded up to the same time Thursday.

Investors Group rose ⅛ to $6, IAC ⅜ to $18½, Pacific Petroleums ¼ to $26¾, Dome Petroleum ⅜ to $34, Northern Electric ¼ to $24¾ and Canadian Pacific ⅛ to $13½. Trizec Corp. fell 1 to $13.

London

The London market was fractionally higher in moderate trading today.

The Financial Times index gained 4.3 to 370.3 in mid-session trading.

Canadian issues were mixed to slightly higher in quiet trading.

Restraint Program Criticized

TORONTO (CP) — The chairman of the International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. has described the federal government's restraint program as long-term controls that might lead to "lethal distortions" in the economy.

Edward Grubb said such controls "will at best enmesh all of us in a labyrinth of bureaucracy, and may very well make labor organizations and business as we know them today as endangered, if not extinct, species."

He told the Canadian Club the program dictates a reduced share of real income to the coporate sector but continued growth in the share going to wages, most salaries and to government.

"At least insofar as the initial guidelines are concerned, the program is a redistribution-of-income program in the guise of an anti-inflation program."

Employees Aren't Kids: Consultant

VANCOUVER (CP) — A leading management consultant says too many managers treat their employees like children and the parent-child relationship in business is no longer working.

Scott Myers said that the values and demands of workers are changing and the number of people who respond to the old authoritarian system is decreasing.

Myers said both labor and management are responsible for the two-class system that results from the parent-child attitude.

He said the gap has widened through the efforts of labor unions who think their success depends on convincing labor that management is their natural enemy.

Myers said the gap must be overcome to increase the productivity of a company. One way to do this, he said, is to establish programs so that employees can purchase shares in the business.

"People are no longer satisifed with just an increase in wages," he said. "They now want a piece of the action."

Impact Studied

TORONTO (CP) — The president and chief executive officer of Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co. Ltd. of Calgary says the toughest test for construction projects in five years will be examination of social impact and quality of management.

S. R. Blair told the Canadian Club that the art of carrying through a new development now includes trying to anticipate what will be acceptable to governments and the public in addition to accommodating attitudes and policies from the start of the project.

Blair's company is participating in one of two applications to build a natural gas pipeline along the Mackenzie River valley.

He said companies find themselves involved in decisions that unavoidably are of public and political concern.

AMC, Chrysler Sales Up

DETROIT (UPI) — American Motors and Chrysler Corp. said today their new car sales in October topped year-ago depressed levels in Detroit's first two reports of the industry's best month since May of 1974.

AMC said its sales were up 55 per cent from strike-affected levels of last year and Chrysler said it topped last October by nearly 7 per cent. Chrysler, hardest hit by the two-year slump, said it sold 93,678 cars in October and its truck sales were a record for the month.

Chrysler sales in the final 10-day period of the month were up just under 6 per cent but the No. 3 automaker said its sales so far this year are still 23 per cent behind last year's already slumping level. About 59 per cent of its October sales were 1975 models since formal introduction of the '76s was not until mid-October.

What Comes Down Makes Ponds Go Up

We got trouble, right here in River City, what with pelting rains and gusty winds which blow all those leaves down to plug the storm drains. Sharon Garrett, 12, going about her patrol duties on Craigflower Road by Victoria West elementary school, shows the sort of problems which inevitably follow. Fact is, of course, that no boy on a bike could resist zipping through that pond and, with more rain to come over the weekend, many of them undoubtedly will.

Pile of Problems In Wake of Storm

A stack of problems was left in the wake of a storm that battered B.C. Thursday with lightning, thunder, hail, rain and gale-force winds that peaked at 70 miles per hour.

Ferry service to the Gulf Islands was wiped out. Other sailings were delayed. The thunder caused damage to three Colwood homes. Two school children received minor shocks.

A freighter in the storm-tossed Strait of Juan de Fuca lost part of her cargo and had to make her way back to Ogden Point.

While the situation eased today, a weather spokesman said there is still a risk of more thunder and lightning this evening.

Lightning blasts in Colwood damaged three homes on Walfred.

Hardest hit was the new home of Barry Casson at 895 Walfred. A bolt hit a tree 20 feet from the house, blowing out the double front door, shattering windows and cracking concrete. Damage is estimated at "a conservative $5,000."

The home next door of Sam McCleve, at 891 Walfred, had all its top floor windows shattered. The electrical system and top floor were damaged. The electrical system of a camper parked outside was damaged and the camper's door and windows were blown out.

Police report the chimney was struck by a lightning bolt.

Two students at Spectrum school received mild shocks when a bolt struck the school, hitting the transformer and knocking out power for a brief period.

The students were leaning on a radiator when the bolt hit. A school spokesman said one suffered a slight burn to his wrist and the other a sore arm.

The Liberian freighter Pacific Glory escaped damage when "a few thousand feet of lumber," stacked on her deck, was lost in the wind-whipped Strait. She put in at Ogden Point without incident.

The Gulf Islands were without ferry service until late afternoon, the high winds and seas making navigation difficult and docking and loading impossible.

Sailings were delayed on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run because of docking problems on the mainland.

Aggravating the situation, the Queen of Victoria was only able to operate three of her four engines because of mechanical problems. She arrived at Swartz Bay for her scheduled 5 p.m. sailing 90 minutes late.

A B.C. Ferries' spokesman said extra late sailings were ordered to ease the situation.

"There was o real traffic jam," he said.

"There was no real traffic caused by downed tree limbs but an outage at Gordon Head from 1 to 3:30 p.m. could not be blamed on the storm. It was a scheduled interruption to allow B.C. Hydro to convert a distribution system from 12.5 kv to 25 kv.

Upper Vancouver Island and the west coast were hit even harder.

In Nanaimo, a house at 1228 Stewart Avenue, slid free from its foundation, ending up in the waters of Newcastle Channel on the city's waterfront, a distance of 12 feet. It was unoccupied at the time.

OAK BAY SOCREDS PICK CAR DEALER

Goal: 'Straighten Out This Mess'

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Businessman Frank Carson won the nomination in Oak Bay Thursday in B.C.'s first Social Credit nominating convention since the provincial election was called.

It was a triumph for business as the 46-year-old car dealer defeated long-time Oak Bay alderman and lawyer John Goult.

More than 1,000 Socreds crowded into Oak Bay Junior High School's auditorium and cafeteria and 624 official delegates took part in the vote. Final results were kept secret but one official said the count was close despite the obviously large Carson contingent.

A Socred member for four years, Carson emphasized in his speech what he called "the wasteful, unthinking extravagance of the Barret tsocialists."

"I believe we need less government in business — and more business in government. That way the people win," he said.

"I want to do my part to straighten out this mess — I don't profess to have all the answers, but I do believe it can be solved with a commonsense businesslike approach."

Gault gave a strong anti-NDP speech and talked of ridding the province of "the socialist viper at its throat."

A Socred member for just five months, he had more fire for Wallace who he called "Barrett's political friend" and said the Tory leader must be defeated to show that the Conservatives are not viable in B.C.

CARSON
. . . NDP 'wasteful'

Barrett wants Wallace to survive to continue to split the freedom vote in B.C., he said.

New Socred party leader Peter Hyndman chaired the meeting and told delegates the eyes of the party were on them because it was the first Socred nomination meeting since the Dec. 11 election was announced last Monday.

But it was obvious the delegates felt they were important because of Wallace and the desire to show Social Credit as the only workable free enterprise party in the province.

The crowd was mainly well-dressed business and professional men with their wives. Most were middle-aged or older and there were mostly familiar Oak Bay faces in the crowd.

When Hyndman announced Carson's victory, they were jubilant, and when asked how many would come out and work, almost every hand went up in unison.

Howie McDairmid, a former Socred MLA from Alberni who ran unsuccessfully for the Socreds in Oak Bay in 1972, called for 1,000 lawn signs through the constituency.

An army of lawn signs, he said, will prove Wallace is in trouble in Oak Bay and the Tories are not viable.

McDiarmid explained later that he took over as constituency president a year ago when membership stood at 250. Now its 1,200.

The organization is in good shape, he said, and it was clear Carson had been a major factor, working hard to sign up members and ensure support in his bid.

Pollen Backs SC, Won't Run

But in denying strong rumors of his candidacy today, at what he said would be his last press conference as mayor, Pollen made a strong pitch for B.C. electors to support the Social Credit party, "with all its limitations."

"I believe very, very sincerely that the provincial government we presently have is so demonstrably incompetent, so demonstrably political—and I say that in the most derogatory manner I possibly can—in the execution of the business of this province, that it is urgent the electors of this province and specifically this community overwhelmingly elect the Social Credit Party, with all its limitations," he said.

Pollen confirmed persistent speculation by admitting that he had closely considered running as a candidate himself, after discussions with Ald. Sam Bawlf, a declared candidate for the Socred nomination in Victoria.

He said he had spent the past week reviewing the possibility and all its implications. "However, reason finally prevailed after much thought and I am in no way interested in participation in this provincial election."

The mayor said he was no more endorsing Bawlf's bid for the nomination than he had endorsed any particular candidate in the civic election, but he did say Victoria could have better representation than it has received from incumbent Socred MLA Newell Morrision.

"I think he (Morrison) has been most inadequate and has done virtually nothing for the city of Victoria," he added.

Pollen described Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson, who are seeking the NDP nomination in Victoria, as "overwhelmingly unqualified" to serve in the legislature, and said a vote for either would be a vote for "institutionalizing the bureaucracy" of the province.

Both are "civil servants," he said, and in an obvious reference to Barber commented that one of them has "lived on governmental handouts throughout his young life . . . albeit he is a very bright young man."

In explaining his belief that it's crucial to replace the NDP government, Pollen noted the forest industry is in a loss position, the mining industry has "gone all to hell" and the Crown corporations are "losing fortunes."

"If we don't put some strong management into our provincial government we are going to be in serious trouble," he warned.

"I don't think the New Democratic party as presently constituted has the management competence to run a small city, let alone one of the major provinces of Canada."

He admitted he is "moderately concerned" about some of the personalities in the Social Credit party, but said he believes there is the potential within the party to provide the "renaissance, the rejuvenation" of B.C.

Asked if he really intended to pass out of public life and become a private citizen, Pollen conceded that his four years of community leadership have left him in a sense "psyched-up" to the satisfaction of the role.

"But I also think it's sometimes good for the jockey to get off the horse," he said, even if in his case the possibility of saddling-up always remain open for some future date.

The prospect of federal politics offers a "fantastic challenge," he said.

Curlers Left In Hacks

A malfunction in dehumidifying apparatus was causing heavy ice and management decided to cancel curling programs until a replacement part arrives.

Program manager Bill Johnston said league curling will resume Monday and lost time likely will be made up at the end of the season.

Johnston said the ice was not removed and when dehumidifiers are working properly again a cap of new ice would be applied.

All machinery and equipment in the new centre is covered by warranty for a minimum of one year, depending on the manufacturer, and in any case the contractor warranty applies the first year.

Consultants, Who Really Needs Them?

The city of Victoria has spent $2,450 hiring a consultant to advise on renovations to the McPherson Playhouse — only to reject every one of the firm's proposals which would have involved spending more than $90,000.

Instead, the parks and recreation committee recommended Thursday that alterations and redecoration on a more modest scale be planned and carried out by city personnel.

The McPherson report, which Mayor Peter Pollen termed "ludicrous," and another proposal that an outside study be commissioned on the municipally-owned Royal Theatre, led to serious questioning of the value of consultants' reports.

Ald. Sam Bawlf wondered whether they could be justified at a time when the city is economizing on all fronts in an effort to keep tax increases as low as possible.

Sounding a lot like his predecessor as finance committee chairman, former alderman Tom Christie, said: "We end up backing into a whole bunch of high-priced reports" which tend to have dubious worth and, in many cases, could be undertaken by city staff.

Bawlf suggested, and the committee agreed, that the $3,000 Royal Theatre study be scrapped.

One of the defined terms of reference was "a visual inspection of the structure to determine its structural integrity," and Bawlf speculated that meant deciding "whether the thing is going to fall down."

Another requirement was a check of all existing drawings of the original building and subsequent alterations or improvements. Commented the alderman: "A draftsman could do that . . . just a man with a measure."

Pollen confessed he was "horrified" that his earlier suggestions for modest refurbishing of the McPherson had been blown up into a major cost item, including the hiring of a consultant.

All he had envisaged was painting a faded wall in the foyer, placing a gay canopy over the hat-check counter, and a new carpet.

For carpet replacement throughout the theatre the consultants, Graphic Office Interiors Ltd., has suggested $30,000, with another $31,650 for alterations and $23,855 for purchase of new furniture.

City recreation manager didn't endorse a single proposal in the study. On the recommendation for concrete-based furniture in the main lobby, he noted that this type of chair used by Air Canada in Toronto is uncomfortable and soon acquires a "scruffy" appearance.

Trafficking In Heroin Charged

A 25-year-old Victoria man was charged in provincial court today with possession of heroin for trafficking after an early morning raid in which about 30 caps of the drug were seized.

Mark Edward Bennett, 2090 Comox, was released on his own recognizance and remanded to Nov. 14.

Prosecutor Malcolm McMicken said he will allege that police also seized trafficking "paraphernalia" in the hotel room raid.

He said Bennett's record stretches back to 1966 and includes two narcotics convictions.

Legal aid lawyer Richard Anthony told the court Bennett has had no convictions for a year and is receiving methadone treatment for his addiction.

FIVE YEARS FOR ARSON

A Victoria man was jailed for five years today after earlier pleading guilty to arson.

Andrew Paul Matwick, 33, of 1010 Russell, was sentenced when he appeared before Judge Harold Alder in Victoria provincial court.

The case arose from an incident Oct. 5 at Matwick's apartment when, after drinking and an argument, he piled blankets and papers in a living room doorway and set them alight, holding a man and woman in the room at knifepoint.

With the only exit blocked by the fire, they had to be rescued by firemen using a ladder and were treated in hospital for smoke inhalation.

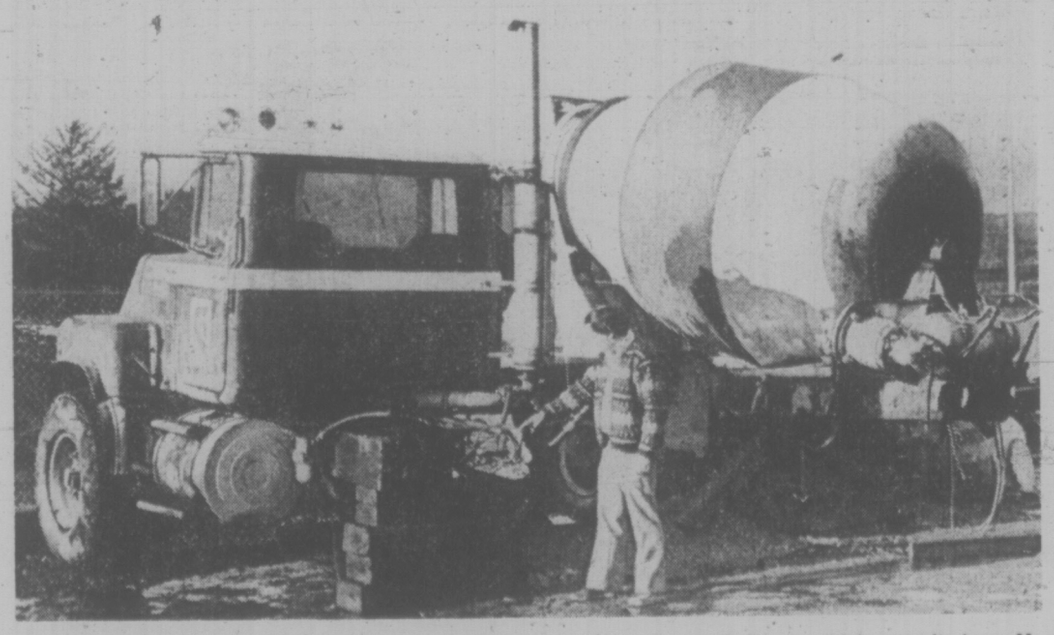
Yet Another False Alarm At Motel

Victoria firemen were called to Windsor Court, 252 Gorge, at 11:30 a.m. today for about the 14th time in five months.

It was yet another false alarm.

A Victoria youth was convicted of mischief in one false alarm last month, but a real blaze occurred a few weeks later when about 90 tenants were evacuated.



TWO HALVES may make a whole — but when you're talking about this Columbia Ready Mix cement truck which broke in two on Sooke Road Thursday, it's going to cost an estimated $25,000 to $30,000 to put pieces together again, according to manager Dennis Ridley, examining results here. He said frame broke in freak mishap. Cab of 28-ton truck went into ditch but driver Terence Lewis was unhurt. He said the break sounded like a rifle shot. (Irving Strickland photo)

Ask The Times

Q. How did the name "penthouse" originate? B.K.

A. A penthouse originally was a shed built on to a building. The word comes from the Latin words, pendere, meaning to hang, and ad, meaning to. Today, penthouse usually refers to a dwelling unit on the roof of a high building.

Workers Won't See Gov't Wage Offer

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Canadian Union of Postal Workers president Joe Davidson said today 22,000 striking inside employees would not get to see the government's latest wage offer because it just wasn't enough.

"The executive board decided unanimously that the government offer was so far from the members' contractual demands it just wasn't worth presenting," said Davidson.

As the executive dug in its heels against the government's latest offer, pockets of dissident members broke ranks and reported for work at the invitation of the post office.

In Ottawa, 15 postal workers were back on the job sorting some 90,000 pieces of mail that were in the office when the strike was called. By this afternoon, 33 mail handlers were on the job, a post office spokesman said.

Officials reported about 40 post offices reopened in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, along with a scattered handful of bureaus in contral British Columbia and the Maritimes.

Members of the 5,000-strong Toronto local were to vote on a return to work Saturday. The Toronto post office is the largest and handles about 50 per cent of the country's mail daily.

"That's definitely the "biscuit," said a source in the postmaster general's office. "If Toronto votes to go back you can figure the strike's been broken."

Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey insisted Thursday that talks to end the 18-day mail strike be discontinued so the CUPW leadership could show the money package to its members and let them decide what to do with it.

Mackasey said the offer of $1.70 an hour over 30 months was a fair agreement and the best he could do.

The offer was recommended six weeks ago by a three-man conciliation board headed by Quebec Justice Jean Moisin, the unanimous choice of both sides to head the panel.

The same increase was accepted by 82 per cent of Canada's 18,000 letter carriers last April.

The union has demanded a 51 per cent increase of $2.73 an hour on a two year contract and wants the men paid for their lunch hour each day. CUPW members now earn $4.59 an hour.

Prime Minister Trudeau told the Commons today government will not legislate an end to the strike at this stage.

Trudeau, pressed by Progressive Conservative MPs, said the government's present attitude does not preclude intervention to end the strike at a later date.

Jim Harris, public relations officer for the Halifax Post Office, also said the post office will accept any striking CUPW members who decide to return to work.

He listed details of the offer as follows:

—The contract would be for 30 months, retroactive to Jan. 1 and ending June 30, 1977.

—The total wage increase would be $1.70 an hour. It would begin with a 70-cent increase retroactive to Jan. 1, followed by 30 cents retroactive to July 1; 40 cents next Jan. 1; and 30 cents next July 1.

—Weekend premiums for each regularly-scheduled hour worked would be increased to 75 cents on Sundays and 60 cents on Saturdays. Shift premiums for evening and night shifts would be increased to

Economic Damage Warned

By PETER THOMSON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Bank of Canada Governor Gerald Bouey Thursday issued a new warning that Canada is in serious economic trouble.

Testifying before the Commons Finance Committee Bouey declared: "It has now become absolutely essential to bring inflation under control in this country if we are to avoid major economic and social damage."

Controlling inflation offers the only realistic hope of achieving a sound economic recovery, he added.

Bouey told the committee that no one should have any doubt what is involved in bringing inflation under control. "We will find ourselves better off, not worse off as many seem to think."

Canada's costs and prices have continued to spiral upwards very rapidly despite more than a year of recession and a more prolonged and severe recession in the outside world.

Two years ago what was happening to prices in Canada was part of a worldwide phenomenon.

"More recently, however, the trend of costs and prices in a number of the main countries with which we trade has clearly begun to moderate," Bouey warned. "To an increasing extent continuing rapid inflation in Canada is now a special problem of our own."

OTTAWA (CP) — After a one-month respite, the cost of living rose sharply in October mainly because of higher prices for shelter and food, Statistics Canada reported today.

The consumer price index in October was at 142.8. Stated another way, this means a basket of consumer items that could be brought for $100 in 1971 cost $142.80 last month. The same basket cost $141.50 in September and $129.10 a year ago.

The purchasing power of a 1971 dollar had dropped to 70 cents by September.

The sharp October rise of nine-tenths of one per cent is a return to the situation which existed during the summer months. Between June and August, the consumer price index jumped almost four per cent. The September increase moderated to two-tenths of one per cent, mainly because food prices were lower.

In October, all the major components of the index, including food, moved higher.

There are still some affects from government-approved increases in energy costs to be reflected in the index.

Freezes in gasoline prices for Ontario and Manitoba residents end Nov. 15. These were imposed to protect consumers against a $1.50-a-barrel rise in domestic crude oil prices approved earlier this year. Ontario residents will pay 5.4 cents a gallon more for gasoline when the price freeze is lifted.

Higher domestic crude prices, plus the 10-cents-a-gallon federal excise tax on gasoline, will eventually add between one and one-half and two percentage points to the consumer price index, Statistics Canada estimates.

About half the October living costs rise occurred because shelter costs were higher. An average 13-percent rise in annual residential property taxes was the main reason.

But in addition, food prices started to move up again after some declines in September. Beef and pork prices were higher as were prices for fresh vegetables, coffee, canned salmon and restaurant meals.

There were some seasonal bargains for fresh fruit to offset these rises, as well as lower sugar prices. But overall, food costs were 12 per cent higher last month than a year ago.

Besides food and shelter, local transit fares jumped to 50 cents a ticket from 35 cents in Montreal, many municipalities raised water rates and professional fees for dental care were raised. Several provinces increased prices for alcholic beverages.

In Paris the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development reported today that Canada and Austria had the smallest increases in consumer prices in the major non-Communist countries in September.

Bourassa Eyes Site Takeover

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec government is considering taking over construction of facilities for the 1976 Olympic Games, according to La Presse.

In a front-page story from Quebec City, the newspaper says Premier Robert Bourassa will decide on government action within five days following meetings with officials of the City of Montreal and the Games organizing committee.

The premier is scheduled to meet Mayor Jean Drapeau and Gerard Niding, chairman of the city's executive committee, during the weekend, the newspaper quotes government sources as saying.

Government spokesmen were reported as saying Quebec may announce the takeover of Games construction when the City of Montreal asks for an additional $200-million loan to help finance Olympic projects. The request is expected soon.

Opposition critics say a further loan would bring the city's total financial involvement with the Games to $812 million.

Cancer Toll Rising

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — People died of cancer at a higher rate in the first seven months of 1975 than at any time since the U.S. government began gathering such statistics 42 years ago, monthly data gathered by the National Centre for Health Statistics show.

The National Cancer Institute said Thursday it could not explain the 5.22 per cent increase this year despite the fact that more people are surviving the illness.

In 1933 — the first year for which comprehensive data are available — 105.9 persons per 100,000 died of cancer. By the end of 1974 the figure was 169.5. As of last July 31, it was 176.3.

The cancer death rate has gone up about 1 per cent annually since 1933.

In 1952, for unexplained reasons, there were 1.9 per cent more deaths than in the previous year, but in the next 20 years deaths kept increasing at the 1 per cent rate.

RC Prelate Dies

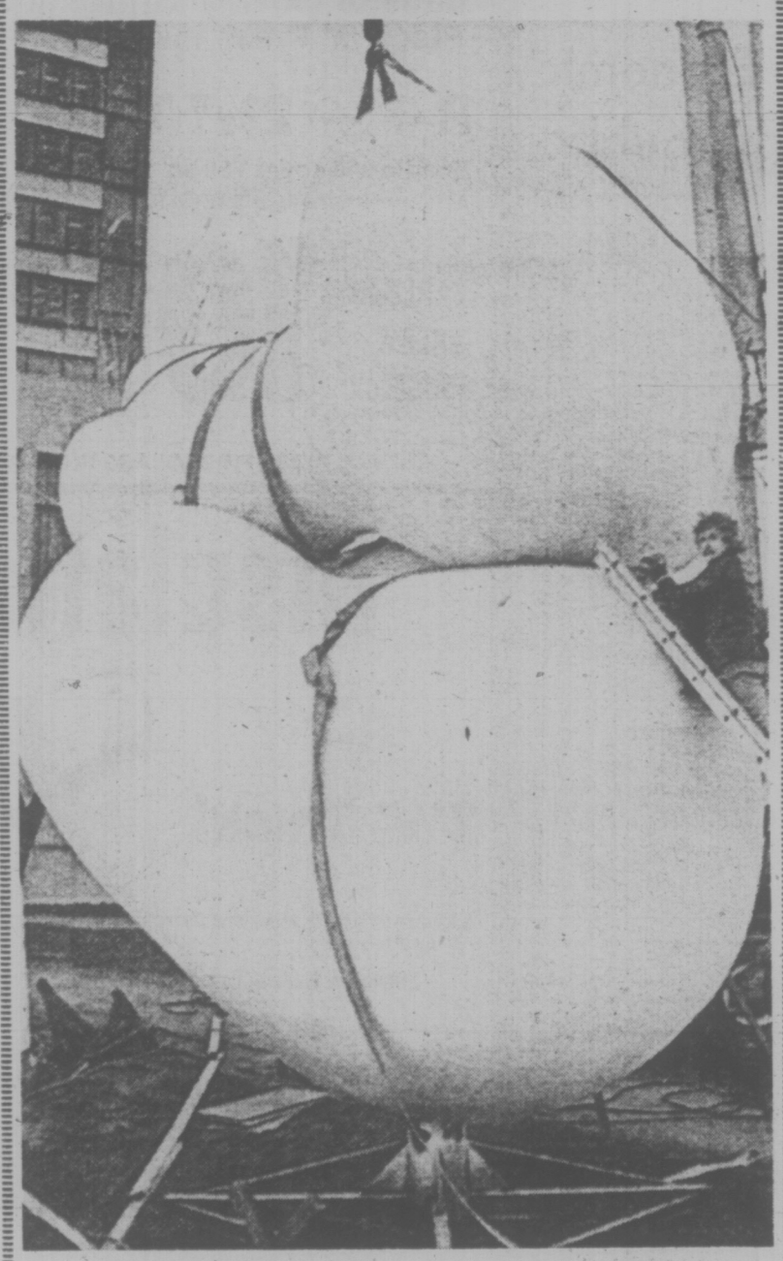
THIS IS LOVE?



Montreal sculptor Henry Jones spent today glueing together the pieces of his sculpture known as Love in front of the Place du Portage in Hull. Two weeks ago, Jones refused to put the pieces together until the Public Works Department, which has already paid cut more than $70,000 for the art work, gave him more money. He backed down after the government threatened to enforce terms of a contract signed in the middle of 1974 which, it said, made assembling the statue Jones' responsibility.

Thumbs-Up From Labor For Barrett

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Premier Barrett hustled into the lions' den of organized labor today and got a thumbs-up sign from labor leaders.

The only union showing a unified opposition to Barrett and the NDP was the Canadian Paperworkers Union, one of the unions legislated back to work.

In the first major speech of his election campaign — an emotional and at times a melodramatic one — to 700 delegates at the B.C. Federation of Labor convention, Barrett said he had wanted labor earlier that the "Honeymoon" wouldn't last.

But that was almost his only reference to his government's amendments to the Labor Code and to Bill 146, the back-to-work legislation.

The delegates have debated the NDP's labor policies for the past week, calling Bill 146 labor's nemesis, but the reception given the premier today leaves no doubt he will have the same support from organized labor he received last time around.

Only about half the delegates in the crowded convention hall rose to their feet when the premier made his appearance, but as he left the place exploded with applause.

Naturally, the biggest target of his speech was the Social Credit opposition — "The same old gang wanting the same old spoils."

The premier said when the agricultural land reserve bill was brought in the opposition cried that "little old fat Dave was at it again."

"They said we were going to pack up all the land in a little box and ship it off to Hitler's Germany or to Stalinist Russia, but two years later everyone ... knows we have the best land control bill in North America."

But if the Social Credit regained power the land bill would be scrapped, said Barrett, "as the speculators will be allowed to have their crop again."

"I finally figured all this out. When you help the companies it's called grants, and when you help people it's called welfare.

"I can tell you that we're changing it around in B.C From now on when he help companies it will be welfare and when we help people it will be called a grant."

$1M Ransom Girls Found Buried Alive

BURNABY — Two teen-age girls spent five days buried in a bunker the size of a grave before being discovered by RCMP following a massive five-day secret investigation.

A 22-year-old Malaysian student has been charged with kidnapping them and demanding a $1 million ransom.

Monica Gunawan and Mrs. Shianita Layarda, both 19-year-old students, were discovered in a dugout six feet by two feet and three feet deep under the concrete floor of a garage at the rear of a house on Ferndale in East Vancouver.

You Sooi Tan appeared in Burnaby provincial court this morning charged with kidnapping.

Finding the two women alive and the arrest brought to an end a massive five-day investigation involving about 100 RCMP members from the Lower Mainland and B.C. Tel staff working in strict secrecy.

'We thought publicity would jeopardize the girls' lives," said Insp. Cy Thomas head of Burnaby RCMP.

When police broke through the concrete garage floor, the girls lay there weak and terrified, a police spokesman said.

"We had some difficulty making them believe we were their saviors and that we hadn't come to kill them," said Sergeant Bill Howitt. "The first thing they saw was a group of big men armed with shotguns."

The women were last heard from at Miss Gunawan's home in Burnaby on Saturday.

Police said that on Sunday, Miss Gunawan's brother, Suhaeri, received a telephone call saying the girls had been kidnapped and would be released when a $1 million ransom was paid.

Police said that Miss Gunawan's father owns a steel and engineering firm and a motorcycle assembly plant in Jakarta, and Miss Layarda's fa-

Hawrelak Dies

EDMONTON (CP) — Mayor William Hawrelak, one of Alberta's most controversial civic officials, died early today in University Hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack. Dr. John Reid, the hospital's medical director, said Hawrelak, 59, died at 7:20 a.m.

Mobile Home Controls Urged

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Mobile homes or "manufactured housing" will soon account for over half the new hosing in B.C. and thus should be treated like conventional homes, according to a government report released today.

The 179-page report presented by special consultant Michael Audain shows 44,000 B.C. households living in mobile homes today and predicts more and more people will move to the cheaper form of housing.

"Within 10 years stick-built detached homes will only be built for people able to afford unique architectural designs," said the report, commissioned by Premier Barrett last May.

In public hearings attended by 1,700 people around the province Audain said he found the construction quality of mobile homes needs to be improved and residents generally feel victimized by entrance and exit fees levied by park operators.

He made 45 recommendations for bringing mobile home builders, salesmen and park operators under government regulation through the department of housing and the Rentalsman's office.

They include:

—Tightening up inspection standards at mobile home plants;

—Much stricter fire safety regulations including provision of secondary escape routes from bedrooms, fire-resistant furnace containers and fire detection alarm systems required by July 1, 1976;

—Restricting the sale of all second-hand homes to licensed real estate agents.

The report said park owners should not be allowed to solicit money as a condition of renting a space and any tenant who has already paid an entrance fee should have it returned by deducting it from monthly rental charges.

Park owners should also not be allowed to restrict the sale of units in their park or be able to take a percentage of the sale value.

No park owner should be able to restrict his park to units sold by any one mobile home dealer and the report recommends the Rentalsman have jurisdiction over disputes between tenant and park owners on park regulations.

The government's new Savings and Trust Corporation should provide loans to park developers in northern and other remote areas of the province and should set up mortgage programs for purchasers.

INQUIRY ORDERED INTO 32-DEATH CRASH

OTTAWA (CP) — A public inquiry will be held into the 32-death crash of a Panarctic Oils Ltd. aircraft at Rea Point, N.W.T., a year ago, Justice Minister Ron Basford said today.

The minister said in the Commons that he will soon announce terms of reference for the inquiry and a commissioner.

Basford said he was making the order for the inquiry after considering recommendations by a coroner's inquest into the deaths of 32 of the 34 crew and passengers aboard the ill-fated flight.

He had also considered the importance of air safety in the North.

A transport department investigation concluded that pilot error was largely responsible for the crash but the pilot's wife and sister have disputed some of the findings of the investigators. The pilot was Brian Thomson of Leduc, Alta.

'Hypocrisy' of Rehabilitation Spurring New Goals for Prisons

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Like people waking from troubles dreams, provincial criminologists are beginning to realize that rehabilitation within the jail system has been a total failure.

In an 80-page report on B.C. corrections completed earlier this year for the attorney-general, University of B.C. law professors William Black and Joseph Weiler condemned the rehabilitation ideal as "excessive in its ambitions, abusive in its operation ... largely a leap of faith."

They concluded rehabilitation was nothing more than a delusion and charged that to perpetuate the model was a "grand hypocrisy."

While he is loath to take as strong a stand as Weiler and Black, John Ekstadt, deputy minister in charge of corrections agrees, with their basic finding — that rehabilitation has been a futile exercise.

"It's been shown to be not only unworkable but also counter-productive," he says.

Why?

One of the main reasons, he says, has peen the persistent attitude that criminality is some sort of sickness. The problem is, he adds, all the attention has gone on treating the illness while the reason the offender is sent to jail is largely forgotten.

Now, he indicates, there has been a swing in thought with more criminologists contending criminal behavior is a normal experience within any society and not necessarily evidence of pathology or individual unhealthiness.

It is leading to some sweeping changes in outlook which will affect not only the way corrections centres should be operated but in the way offenders should be treated.

"We've gone a fair way in the past three years to downplaying and absolutely denying the value of treatment or rehabilitation as a goal in corrections," Ekstedt says. "Now we're going more for the notion of a utilitarian concept where the offender is made aware of the consequences to his behavior in clear, concise terms."

It has reached the point where senior officials in the corrections system are referring to jails not as places of rehabilitation any more but rather as places of consequence.

The redirection of the government's approach to corrections has already been shown in two fairly recent developments — the closing of the centre in Haney and the growth of the community corrections program.

Ekstedt says Haney, once the major rehabilitation centre in the province for young offenders, was abandoned because it proved to be a "total loss."

Less than four per cent of the inmates who took trade training ever practised their new skills on the street, he said.

"Even those who really wanted the training never followed through with the trade once they got out.

"They found there were all kinds of other things they needed which the course didn't teach them.

"They may have learned a trade but they didn't learn how to work or the discipline required to hold down a job."

If there is any answer, he suggests, it lies in the community corrections program where inmates attend school or hold jobs in the community while reporting back to jail each night for the duration of their sentence.

"Pragmatically and functionally it is one of the best things happening in the system," he says.

At present, between 12,000 and 13,000 are involved in community supervision programs in the province. Another 1,600 to 1,700 are confined in provincial jails—the same number as was institutionalized 10 to 15 years ago.

"What we are trying to do is increase the probation service rather than the jails."

Ekstedt believes a person sent to jail should receive a definite sentence. He would like to see a reduction in remission time—the time a prisoner earns off his sentence for good behavior.

"I think we are very close to coming upon a model which will either eliminate or severely modify remission in institutions."

He also sees little value in the indeterminate sentence which gives correction staff the authority to release an inmate at any time up to the maximum set by the judge, based on progress an inmate makes in rehabilitation programs.

Ekstedt says both remission time and the indeterminate sentence have placed an "inordinate amount of sheer power" in the hands of corrections officials.

He says, however, that despite the "good intentions of staff", the power has been used not so much to manipulate behavior changes in the inmate as it has been to maintain order in the institution.

He says a person sent to jail soon realizes he must play along with the authorities and that as long as he agrees to anything he'll get out or get easy time.

Ekstedt notes judges still set indeterminate sentences with the mistaken notion jails are places of rehabilitation.

"The judges and corrections are out of synch with each other at present" he says.

"In terms of reform," Ekstedt says, "corrections is miles ahead of a lot of the other branches of the justice system.

"The reason is not that we're so good as it is we had got so bad. Corrections, because it was so visible, was the focus of attention, the subject of hard criticism.

"In the past few years we've undergone a severe self-analysis."

The results of that analysis are just now beginning to be felt he says.

CANADA-FRANCE TIFF?

OTTAWA (CP) — Relations between Canada and France will deteriorate unless Canada is admitted to an economic summit conference of Western Nations later this month in Paris, External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen said Thursday.

He told reporters that the exclusion of Canada, if it occurs, is bound to affect relations between the two countries "and it won't be a favorable effect."

France objects to Canada's attendance because it wants to hold the conference down to a manageable size, he said. But Ottawa considers Canada's economic clout sufficient to warrant admission.

He commented after John Diefenbaker (PC—Prince Albert) complained in the Commons that Canada has been humiliated by France's decision.

MacEachen told MPS that the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom and West Germany are all pressing for Canada's admission." He hoped that France would relent.

"No other country can speak for Canada," he said.

Diefenbaker said Canada is begging "on bended knee." This should not be the case after the help France was given by Canadian troops in two world wars.

MacEachen denied the suggestion. "We won't get on bended knee for anyone to attend this conference," he told reporters.

He said he is still hopeful Canada will be admitted.

Originally, organizers wanted to restrict the conference to five countries, he said. Italy was admitted later but France argued that a further extension to include Canada would throw the conference open to all countries.

"They say he (Bourassa) has the closest relations of all with the President of France," Diefenbaker joked with reporters afterward.

Charges in Death Stayed

NANAIMO (CP) — Provincial court Judge Stanley Wardill granted a stay of proceedings Thursday in the case of Chew Excavating Co. of Victoria.

The company was charged with a violation of the Workers' Compensation Act's accident prevention regulations in the Oct. 3, 1974, death of Richard Jancowski, 28, of Parksville, who was electrocuted at a Nanaimo construction site.

A stay was also granted on one of the charges against Raymond Crawford, of Victoria, the company supervisor, who was charged under the same act.

Lillian Gish in Broken Blossoms (1919)

PBS Premieres Griffith Classic

Broken Blossoms, a 1919 classic directed by D. W. Griffith and starring Lillian Gish, comes to the Silent Years, November 8 at 9 p.m. on KCTS-9.

This poignant, romantic tragedy is based on Thomas Burke's Limehouse Nights — the story of a sadistic prize-fighter whose fragile daughter is rescued from mistreatment by a sympathetic and sensitive Chinese youth. Her flight is shortlived, however, as racial prejudice and her father's determination gain the upper hand.

The film has often been praised for the fine characterizations: Ms. Gish as the terrified waif; Donald Crisp as the brutal father; Richard Barthelmess as the sensitive, dreamy immigrant; and the legendary Kid McCoy (the source of the phrase "the real McCoy") in a supporting role.

According to Lewis Jacobs, "the fine execution and cutting of these scenes were supported by a sustained use of the camera to evoke moods, feelings, and pictorial qualities. The 'soft-focus' suited the tenderness of the tale. Altogether Broken Blossoms was a brilliant culmination for the 'sweet and innocent' era in American movies, already dying, and being succeeded by the sophisticated, daring 'triangle' era."

When first released, Broken Blossoms received even more attention and praise than Birth of a Nation. The New York Evening Telegram asserted "it is as if Dickens had spoken by means of the camera," while the New York Morning Telegraph termed it "so exquisite, so fragile, so beautifully and fragrantly poetic."

Lilliam Gish is the host for this Silent Year presentation, providing a truly unique insight into the expgrience of the film.

Critic Says 1975 TV Season the Worst Ever

JOHN LEONARD

(NYT)—According to Jean-Paul Sartre, "Everything we see and experience impels us to say, 'This can't last.' And yet change is not even conceivable, except in the firm of a cataclysm." He wasn't talking about the new TV season, but he could have been. On the other hand, Norman Lear, a kind of electric toaster out of which sit-coms pop like slices of Wonder bread every morning before breakfast, is talking about the new season, and he sounds pretty much like Sartre: "There's something wrong all over the dial."

There certainly is. Every year at about this time somebody climbs into the pulpit, fixes a baleful eye on the congregation, and sermonizes: This is the worst new TV season in the memory of vertebrates. I've been hearing this autumnal dirge, and occasionally singing it myself, for at least a decade. And now at last it's true, and we've used up all our adjectives, and sitting down to this assignment is like sitting down to a plate of congealed moose brains.

What on earth were the pilots like that the networks rejected last spring? Are they trying to tell us that somewhere in the world there was enough vapidity and bad faith to produce programs that were actually worse than Mobile One, Big Eddie, Three for the Road and The Montefuscos? I don't believe it, not even in Southern California.

The Montefuscos, Fay and The Invisible Man on NBC have already been axed, with The Family Holvak soon to follow. So much for the "counterprograming" about which we read a million or so words just two months ago.

On CBS, Three for the Road, Kate McShane and Big Eddie have had it, and Beacon Hill is in trouble as big as its budget. On ABC, Barbary Coast isn't going to make it, neither is Safurday Night Live with Howard Cosell — much of which incidentally, is now on tape — nor Mobile One, and Matt Helm is fading fast. That's half of the new season's offerings, and we're still only in November.

Of all the new programs, only Phyllis is a hit. Since it's sandwiched in between Rhoda and All in the Family on Monday evenings, it would have to try hard not to be a hit. Joe and Sons survives simply because not enough people have the energy to heave themslves out of thir lard buckets to switch channels after Good Times. So does Bronk, riding piggyback on Kojak. Does anyone seriously expect Starsky and Hutch, Doctors Hospital, Swiss Family Robinson, Doc and On the Rocks to be around in the fall of 1976? Or Ellery Queen, for that matter, to which I am partial because I like 1950's Perry Mason-look-alike television, but Mr. Nielsen won't give me one of his Audimeters because he knows I'd mate it with a chicken and they'd give birth to a network vice-president in charge of counterprograming.

So far, we haven't even discussed quality, unless it's the quality of panic. Watching When Things Were Rotten is like being locked inside a package of bubblegum where the only card is Alvin Dark. I think Mel Brooks should turn himself off, but the nine-year-olds of America apparently disagree.

Most of the critics look at Medical Story as though it were an avatar of the sort of remedial seriousness usually associated with public television; it seems to me to be a liquid snarl, a hose squirting pieties into the eyes of the audience as though we were a nursery school on fire and needed a noble drench. Welcome Back, Kotter — and I say this almost musclebound with ambivalence — is an insult to Albert Shanker.

Much is being made of late about the role of ABC in clouding our prime-time minds. As a network, it has improved itself from a poor third, behind CBS and NBC, to a close second, behind CBS and ahead of NBC. In fact, according to the Nielsens for the week ending Oct. 12, ABC was number one, probably because it passed up President Ford's press conference in favor of its regular Thursday-night programs. It is axiomatic that when the network that bequeathes us Howard CoseR looks good, the nation is in trouble.

But the significance of this development slumber elsewhere. The fact of the matter is that, for the first time in a long time, the nation isn't watching as much television as, according to network projections, it ought. Mr. Nielsen says so. Robert Wood, the president of CBS-TV, is sufficently concerned to have asked his research staff to think about ways Mr. Nielsen might review his data. "Nobody knows why the ratings are off yet," Mr. Wood told a Variety reporter, "but we'll know soon." It might be instructive if the networks' executives sentenced themselves to watching their own programs.

Perhaps the American public is to be congratulated. Perhaps a certain healthy surliness is reasserting itself, a therapeutic disinclination to be cutesied into numbdom. We can expect a gaggle of excuses from the networks in the next several months, and a lot of fiddling with time slots, and much shifting of dogs from one night to another, and an overmuch of promises and Norman Lear. Attempts will be made to blame the Federal Communications Commission for having declared a "family viewing" period that mysteriously inhibits the violent and sexy imaginations of those people who gave us Barbary Coast, The Family Holvak and Three for the Road. Beeswax.

That the new TV season, as entertainment, falls somewhere between reading analyses of New York City's fiscal crisis and reruns of The Monkees means bad writing, bad producing, bad directing and bad decision-making in the crunch.

There are enough good programs on television — Mary Tyler Moore, M-A-S-H, Baretta, Police Story, and The Rockford Files to name some — for every vertebrate to realize that The Montefuscos was in no way inevitable. Fate, goes a Welsh proverb, does not work in trivialities.

. . . While Another Calls It 'Embarrassing'

JOHN J. O'CONNOR

What is the "reality" of television? Volumes, valuable volumes, have been written about the more philosophic aspects of the medium as mirror of purveyor of shadows in a Platonic cave. But a definition has yet to be formulated on a considerably more practical level. For the vast majoriy of American broadcasters, and for a good may supposedly objective observers of the industry, TV reality is embedded in balance sheets showing healthy and growing profits. For many professional critics and, I suspect, an expanding portion of the general public, television is a depressing landscape of mediocre programing.

Part of the problem at network levels is the grooming of an executive type who works furiously in the service of abstract audience ratings but rarely takes time out to sit down and actually watch television. The process breeds cynicism. At the local level, affiliates worry if the networks will be able to put together a "successful" season for them. In Houston recently at a gathering of broadcasters, I found most station representatives talking about "hardware," new computer systems that would prove helpful to advertising salesmen. Yes, the new seson was uncommonly embarrassing, but let's not worry about that too much. Let's wait to see how the ratings fall into place.

When confronted with an argument for "quality" programming, some representatives insisted on confusing the issue. For them, quality is synonymous with Philharmonic concerts and "serious" culture, the kind of thing that, sin of free-enterprise sins, gets low ratings on public television. But, of course, the boundaries of quality are broad and hardly exclusive of high ratings (consider All in the Family or The Waltons or Kojak.

The incredible TV machine, however, not only rumbles on but also accelerates. Recently, Marvin Antonowsky, program chief of the NBC television network, explained how Fay, a new comedy series starring Lee Grant, came to be canceled so early in the new season. It seems innovative audience-measurement tools are at hand in the land of electronics. Joining the Nielsen numbers is something called the Trendex "callback" system, whereby households in 25 cities are asked what shows they have watched and if they plan to watch them again. A good many people, not surprisingly, didn't plan to watch Fay again.

Television, then, has another gadet that enables Mr. Antonowsky and his confreres "to act quickly and dispassionately." As he puts it, "fast input makes possible fast output." But none of this has anything necessarily to do with better programs. One mediocre program can be yanked because of low ratings. Another can be inserted and possibly survive because of not-so-low ratings. Mr. Antonowsky explains further, in one of the more revealing remarks about the mechanics of TV: "The price of failure looms too large for us not to make the pragmatic decisions that are necessary, even though we may not like doing it." What, precisely, is the "price of failure"? Mediocrity? Hardly. Try something more pragmatic, like ratings, corporate profits, the possibility of being fired.

Admittedly, it would be foolhardy for the television critic to ignore the matter of profitability. For better or worse, American television rests, primarily, on a foundaiton of commercial interests, and the formative patterns of operation are solidly entrenched. But it is in the interest of everyone, the country as a whole, the commercial considerations not be allowed to become the only governing criterion for a medium of such awesome pervasiveness.

However, the future, the super-age in which "fast input makes possible fast output," does not look promising. For example, this season's big story, at least for the first few weeks, was ABC's moving into a "competitive" ratings position with CBS and NBC, both of which showed rating drops. If ABC "maintains strength," the network will have a big "success" story. Its top executives will be profiled in trade and business magazines. Praise will flow freely in corporate suites. Few will bother to notice the Welcome Back, Kotter and Starsky and Hutch, two of the more successful new series for ABC, remain dreadful shows.

Again, quality does not have to mean a steady diet of specials such as Long Day's Journey Into Night, The Glass Menagerie with Katharine Hepburn, Joseph Papp's production of Wedding Band, Antony and Cleopatra, or Laurence Olivier in The Merchant of Venice — all productions carried on ABC. Quality of another sort can be found in the weekly series Baretta, or at least in Robert Blake's performance as a Jimmy Cagney-John Garfield type of undercover cop. In fact, ABC deserves credit for saving this show, for switching its time period and getting an audience.

But all the switching in the world is not going to save clinkers like Barbary Coast or Mobile One or Matt Helm. At a recent meeting with reporters and editors of this newspaper, Frederick Pierce, president of the ABC TV network, implied that such salvaging might be possible, but his position for the defense was noticeable half-hearted.

When asked if the closer three-way competition among the networks would be of some benefit to the public, Mr. Pierce replied that vigorous competiton in the free-enterprise system traditionally made for a better product. This seemingly perfect logic, though ignores the "lowest-common-denominator" nature of the mass-programming beast. Rapped in a downward spiral of say, ABC's Starsky and Hutch, CBS's Bronk and NBC's The Invisible Man, the lowest in terms of quality could very well turn out to be the highest in terms of ratings. Success, once again, becomes meaningless and rather embarrassing.

Special Profiles Canadian Artists

CBC-TV plans to present three one-hour specials on the arts, including two super-beautiful films on painters.

On Monday, Nov. 17 at 10 p.m., three Canadian realist painters and their works are portrayed in a production by Reiner Moritz of Germany.

A Canadian tradition of representational work of countryside, people and surrounding objects is continued in the painters Alex Colville (born 1920), Christopher Pratt (born 1935) and Ken Danby (born 1940).

All three painters are known internationally, particularly the New Brunswick artist Colville, who sells the majority of his work in Germany and the U.S. It is only since 1963 that he has devoted himself full-time to painting — his paintings are often described as "poetic realism" or magic realism."

During the previous two decades he taught art at Mount Allison University, in Sackville, N.B., where he also studied as an undergraduate.

Christopher Pratt is a Newfoundlander who paints the scene around his home in the tiny community of St. Catharine on St. Mary's Bay. His paintings demonstrate a passion for regularity and order — white clapboard houses, sparsely-furnished interiors and landscapes comprise his subject matter.

Younger than the other two, Ken Danby, who liyes in Guelph, Ont., did for a short period paint in an abstract style — but then devoted himself entirely to realism, convinced of the success of American, painter Andrew Wyeth. This one-hour special is titled The Canadian Realists — Colville, Pratt, Danby.

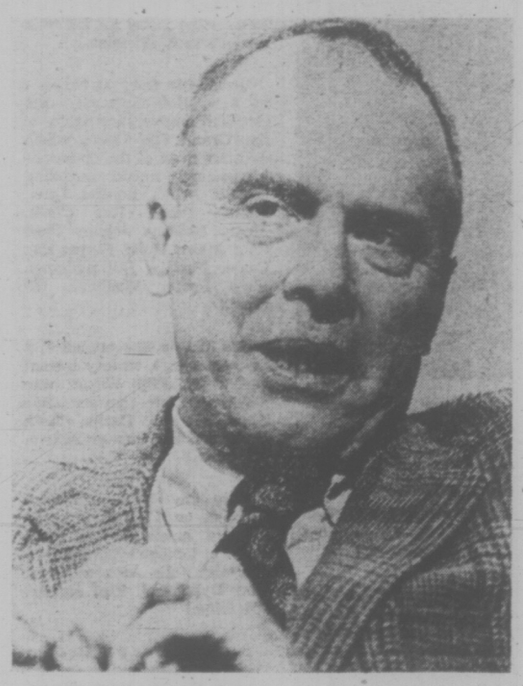
The second arts special, The Sun is God, to be shown Jan. 5, is a film drama-documentary on one of the greatest innovators of art, Joseph Mallord William Turner, who died in 1851. His influence on art is comparable to the influence of Picasso. This film, produced by Thames TV in England, tells the story of Turner's mysterious and sometimes bizarre life, intercut with many of his paintings, to illuminate the achievements of this barber's son who rose to become England's most popular and wealthy painter, then withdrew into seclusion. The actor Leo McKern plays Turner in this film, which marks the 200th anniversary of the birth of the painter.

Tentatively scheduled for telecast in the spring of 1976 is a film with the working title of The Present Past. It has host-interviewer Pat Patterson taking viewers on a tour of some of the building restoration and preservation going on in Canada.

Some of the places to be visited include St. Andrew's, N.B. where more than 250 buildings are over 100 years old; Port Hope, Ont., where some magnificent old houses are being preserved or restored by private individuals; and Winnipeg, where Dalnavert House and Red River House have been restored and turned into museums.

The program will also look at government financed restorations taking place in Place Royale, Quebec City. Here, house dating from the early 17th century, are being reconstructed with federal and provincial monies into office buildings, shops and restaurants. This is the lower town of Quebec City and the work being done is changing the area to look as it looked in the time of Champlain and Frontenac.

Federal financing is also being used to convert the old buildings along the Halifax waterfront into shops, offices and restaurants, much like what occurred with private money in Vancouver's Gastown and Toronto's Yorkville areas.



ALEX COLVILLE well-known Canadian painter, is one of three artists profiled in a new CBC-TV special on the arts, to be shown on Monday, November 17 at 10 p.m. on Channels 2 and 6.

DOCUMENTARY SCORES HIGH RATINGS

By TOM SHALES

WASHINGTON (WP) — First reports from major U.S. cities indicate that The Incredible Machine, a National Geographic special show last week on public TV stations, scored the highest ratings of any program in the history of public television. In some cities, the show defeated competition from all three commercial networks.

In Washington, the program got a 28 per cent share of the viewing audience, believed to be a record for Channel 26, according to a station spokesman. The show is a filmed travelogue through the human body that also includes segments on "biofeedback" and other new medical and scientific technologies.

Ironically, although commerical networks turned down the program a year ago, both NBC and CBS carried paid advertisements for the show that contributed to its high ratings. ABC refused the commercials.

Broadcasting sources, attribute the strong showing both to the sensational subject matter of the documentary — which included many scenes photographed inside living human beings — and the massive promotional campaign waged in the show's behalf by the Gulf Oil Corporation, which has underwritten the Geographic specials with a three-year, $3.72 million grant.

An equal amount — at least $1 million a year — will be spent by Gulf to promote the show and, sources at the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) said, as much as $750,000 of that may have been spent to ballyhoo Machine, considered the strongest of the four specials scheduled for this year. (The actual cost of producing Machine was about $250,000).

The campaign included ads in national magazines and, on the day of the telecast, a commercial "blitz" on the top three radio stations in each of the top 25 markets in the country.

"We proved that when public TV mounts a complete advertising and promotion campaign for a program of real quality, we can be competitive with commercial networks," said Tom Skinner, vice-president of WQED in Pittsburgh, which got the Gulf grant.

VIEWERS SOLVE LIVE MYSTERY

By JACQUES BOUCHARD

PARIS (CP) — French television is offering viewers a live murder mystery each month entitled The Inspector Leads the Investigation which includes audience participation and slow-motion film sequences.

Unlike most North American crime shows, this one has only a partial script and the crime is solved during the course of the program by actors who consult with an experienced police investigator.

Four actors playing detectives followed the chief inspector's orders, interviewing witnesses and victims with the real-life detective available for consultation.

As the investigation unrolled, the chief inspector was permitted to telephone any viewer who phoned in with a clue.

This system did not work well in the first show when four attempts by the chief inspector to reach people who phoned were unsuccessful.

Viewers who phone in with good tips receive cash prizes.

If a viewer identifies the murderer and the means by which the murder was committed, the chief inspector is informed that someone has solved the crime but, to heighten the tension, he is not told what the solution to the crime is.

Deceptive Advertising Can Cause Conflict in Children

NEW YORK (AP) — Misleading television advertisements can create serious conflicts in children seven to 10 years old, two researchers reported recently.

"Advertising may represent one of the first examples of the institutionalized hypocrisy," said Dr. Thomas Bever, professor of psychology and linguistics at Columbia University.

"And the experience of coming to terms with that can have quite a serious effects at that age."

His conclusion came after a study with Martin Smith, cofounder of a New York advertising agency, of 48 children between five and 12 years old in Ridgewood, N.J.

They said additional research is needed to discover "what aspects of advertising the child of eight finds to be deceptive and whether the conflict advertising causes is necessary or even beneficial."

Other age groups were not affected as greatly as the seven-to-10-year-olds, said their study.

For instance, children five or six years old consider all television to be pure entertainment and do not separate the commercials, the researchers said.

"Most of the five and six-year-olds we studied often prefer commericals to programming content because of their superior production values, but advertising plays no meaningliful role in their lives," Smith said. "They remain insulated from its influence."

The 11-and 12-year-olds, meanwhile, "showed a sharp reduction in conflict," Smith said. "They seem to have made certain accommodations to the adult world. Many appeared able to extract useful information from advertising and to discard what they consider to be untrue."

But the seven-to 10-year-olds "face increasing conflcits as they begin to perceive various forms of adult hypocrisy," he said. "A child can dismiss his personal experiences with the deceit of individual adults, but realizing that society allows for institutional hypocrisy violates moral precepts he has been taught."

THE WIZARD OF OZ

British Columbia Television will present the Canadian television premiere of the film classic The Wizard of Oz Wednesday, November 12 at 7:30 p.m. The beautiful story of a little girl who journeys "over the rainbow" to the wondrous Emerald City is enchanting entertainment for children, and it is a happily nostalgic experience for the older generation.

Judy Garland stars as Dorothy, swept away from her Kansas home by a cyclone, and carried to Oz. She and her dog Toto are befriended by the Cowardly Lion (Burt Lahr), the Tin Woodman (Jack Haley) and the Scarecrow (Ray Bolger). In an effort to help Dorothy return home, they seek the help of the Wizard of Oz (Frank Morgan). Billie Burke plays Glenda, the good witch who gives Dorothy a magical pair of ruby slippers, and helps protect the travellers on their journey. But the Wicked Witch of the West (Margaret Hamilton) uses her evil powers aginst the group.

The unforgettable musical score by Harold Arlen and E. Y. Harburg includes "Somewhere over the Rainbow" and "We're Off to See the Wizard." Released in 1939, the same year as "Gone With the Wind," "The Wizard of Oz" faced stiff competition for Academy Award honors. It won Oscars for Best Song, Best Original Score, and Judy Garland was given a special award for the Best Performance by a Juvenile.

The Wizard of Oz is part of BCTV's Premiere Series, a special package of movies never before seen on Canadian television. The next film in the series, Dr. Zhivago will be shown Saturday, November 22, and Monday, November 24, at 9:00 p.m. on British Columbia Television.

UPSTAIRS, DOWNSTAIRS—Hudson (Gordon Jackson) casts a keen eye over a fine bottle of wine which will be served to the upstairs family by Mrs. Bridges Angela Baddeley) as this popular BBC series continues on Wednesdays at 10 p.m. on Channels 2 and 6.

Make-Up Joins The Space Age

Makeup has joined the space age and Apollo 11's trip to the moon has helped put a better scar on William Shatner, who stars as an undercover agent and master of disguise in Barbary Coast.

Time was when makeup consisted of false hair, putty and praying — praying that the lights wouldn't get too hot and cause the stuff fo fall off.

"Makeup's come a long way," says Shatner, "and with all the new materials, the space age has contributed tremendously." Shatner is a star who really appreciates the art as he weekly puts in 15 to 20 hours in makeup artist Tom Burman's chair. His role of undercover agent, Jeff Cable, calls for him to assume various ingenious disguises in each episode to ferret out crime on San Francisco's Barbary Coast.

Shatner said, with a nod toward Burman, "And here's one of the best in the business. He's incredible and he astounds me more every day changing me from one extreme to another."

Burman, it turns out, has gained his reputation by his innovations in cosmetic applications. He, of course, has gone to the best cosmetic institutions, but he now finds unlikely sources to supply him with materials applicable to his profession.

Burman became an apprentice to a dental technician where he learned facial structure through the study of bones and teeth. He actually made dentures for patients. This is invaluable to him now as one creation for Shatner, that of a one-eyed derelict, Burman created a complete set of dentures that caused the area around Shatner's mouth to protrude along with a smile that isn't too pretty.

But Burman's greatest new supply of materials comes from experimental laboratories. The plastics, polyurathanes, the silicones, and poly sulfides are the "now" substances and have remarkable adaptabilities.

Chemical companies, anxious to determine the versatility of their products, send Burman samples and he in turn puts them to practical tests to learn of their molding, adhering and viscosity qualities — adding to jowls, bulbing a nose, and adding scars.

Also new adhesives, resins, and plastic fibers are used to create moustaches, sideburns and wigs. Burman states that the marriage between the cosmetic industry and the space industry is still in the honeymoon stage — the surface has been barely scratched.

Creative Harmony MTM Recipe for Success

By DON SHIRLEY

LOS ANGELES (WP) — When Mary Tyler Moore Enterprises held its first Christmas party, in 1970, it was in a cramped studio, surrounded by mud and "decorated like a high school gym," recalls James Brooks. It was, he says, "magical."

Brooks and Allan Burns were the creative forces in the new company. Their only child then was The Mary Tyler Moore Show. Everyone knew each other. Everyone sang Silent Night. There was embracing, weeping, "so much love." Brooks describes a group of people who produced a television show together and were as close to each other as they were to anyone. He describes a group suspiciously like the WJM newsroom staff on Moore.

Unlike WJM, MTM prospered. Ratings climbed. Critics smiled. The Bob Newhart Show joined the family. So did Rhoda, Paul Sand in Friends and Lovers, The Texas Wheelers, The Bob Crane Show — all in the 1974-75 season. This year brought Phyllis, Doc, Three for the Road and a Mary Tyler Moore musical special.

In future seasons, the cat on the MTM log expects litters to include Westerns, TV movies, an MTM family hour using supporting actors from other MTM shows in dramatic situations, plus plain old comedies.

At last spring's Emmy ceremony, where Moore finally was named best comedy series, Edward Asner (Lou Grant on Moore) remarked that Zero Population Growth wants to spay the MTM cat. Unfortunately that won't be necessary. Last year three of MTM's four new shows flopped. Last week Three for the Road died. Still, in the cat-eat-cat world of a commercial television, MTM is often cited as a model of a successful independent production company. Its record of selling its ideas to networks is remarkable. Its critical acclaim and creative impact is currently matched only by the noisier Norman Lear factory.

Has all this affected MTM's Christmas parties? Well, last year's was in a fancy hotel ballroom, with hundreds of people seated at tables. Brooks didn't go.

Tinker Touch

MTM boss Grant Tinker and his wife, one Mary Tyler Moore, moved out of their beach house last year and Brooks moved in. It's a house with a checkered past for fan magazine devotees, for Tinker cites it as a big symptom of the marital problems that led to a six-week separation between Tinker and Moore in 1973. Neither of them really wanted to live at Malibu. They now live together in Belair, much closer to the MTM factory at CBS Studio Centre (the old Mack Sennett factory) in Studio City.

Brooks bought a TV set from them when he moved to their old place. To determine its value, Tinker and Brooks wrote separate estimates and then showed each other what they had written. Their estimates were identical.

Tinker and Brooks and Allan Burns usually agree on anything that has to do with television, and the consensus at MTM is that if there's a "Tinker touch," it's this harmony among Tinker and his employees.

"I'm starstruck by creative people," says Tinker. "All those who do things I can't do. You'd rather hobnob with the .300 hitter than the .220." When he left his job as vice-president in charge of television programming at 20th Century-Fox, Tinker gathered three hitters together — Moore of The Dick Van Dyke Show fame and Brooks and Burns, who had both worked, though not as partners, on Room 222. The group started its own team, with the blessings of CBS. Ever since, Tinker handles the business side of the game and recruits hitters, leaving them alone once they've signed.

Autonomy

"We've had as much autonomy as you can get anywhere," says Brooks. "No original writer has ever lost a credit here. This is a writers' shop." Adds Jay Tarses, a producer of The Bob Newhart Show: "All the producers are writers. That's the key to MTM shows." Tarses calls Tinker "one of the best gentile people in the world."

While Ted Baxter and Georgette Franklin stumbled through their wedding recently at the filming of the Moore episode which will be seen shortly, Tinker chuckled quietly in the control booth amid the bustle of his staff. He offered a substitute for the final line in a scene and was rather brusquely rejected.

However, when Brooks wanted to re-shoot a segment because an important word was dropped from a line, Tinker assured Brooks that the line could be added in the editing, and the technical staff confirmed it. "Listen to an old pro," kidded Tinker, who is 49.

Tinker's detachment is not at all like the style of his chief rival, Norman Lear, as Tinker will tell you: "Norman is integrally involved as a creative person in his shows. My job is removed from that process. I might try to dissuade but I don't veto. Were I to try to legislate creatively, I would be sitting here alone."

Lear led the creative forces in the fight against the National Association of Broadcasters' "family hour," while Tinker's initial reaction was mild. He now regrets this. "I was a little slow to catch on to the act they meant it," he says. "We hadn't had a lot of (censorship) trouble with our shows. But I should have abhorred it from day one."

Tinker is so congenial that it's difficult to imagine him "abhorring" anything. But Brooks assesses Tinker as a "closet hothead" and relates their encounter with an industry oddsmaker who had denigrated Moore. Tinker had warned Brooks not to lose his temper, but when the trio actually met, says Brooks, "Tinker blew his stack at the guy."

Generally, though, Tinker appears calm, and his shows reflect this rather than his occasional eruptions. There is a distaste for high decibels at MTM and an unwillingness to do "issue" shows. "I don't think we've broken any new ground," says Tinker, "as Norman could properly claim. We have done something better than anyone else." Like what? "I'd rather let a guy like Brooks say what is distinctive about our shows and I'll say 'right.'"

MARY TYLER MOORE

Some Flops

Brooks thinks Moore broke new ground in its presentation of single women and relations between the sexes, and he recalls feeling "really screwed up by Father Knows Best and how much I believed this was everybody's life." But he doesn't claim that Moore is gritty realism either. It "represents life as I want it to be for myself, and I can't quite get there," he says. "We have a responsibility not to reflect contemporary American life as more than it is, and yet still find something good in it."

This recipe for relatively quiet comedy rooted somewhere between the clouds and the mud hasn't always worked:

—Paul Sand in Friends and Lovers didn't die "for lack of attention," rues Tinker. "We just never quite got it." Brooks adds that after a brilliant pilot about "a man and a woman as each other's best friend," the leading actress was dropped and written out of the show. "We should have gone ahead with the original concept," says Brooks. Girl friends were shuttled on and off, and in the confusion, "it was very hard for Paul, who was an experimental actor, to lock up a show in three days (the amount of rehearsal time for an episode)."

—The Texas Wheelers, much beloved by critics, who usually attribute its death to its spot in the ABC Friday lineup, "should have been an hour show in hindsight," says Tinker. "A contemporary Waltons but harder. In its half format, the audience expected hard comedy from the beginning. They didn't understand it. I could almost take personal responsibility for that." He was less in touch with Wheelers than some of his shows, since it originated outside MTM.

—The Bob Crane Show, much despised by critics, was "ill-conceived and ill-fated from the beginning," concedes Tinker. "It was not up to MTM standards. It deserved to fail." MTM approached NBC with a premise, NBC supplied Crane, and the twain never meshed. MTM wanted to do short scenes with medical reality a la MASH. Crane convinced MTM to do a show with longer scenes and more yocks, recalls one of its producers, Martin Cohan. MTM and Crane had problems using the supporting actors, and NBC censors imposed a preview of "family hour" standards, says Cohan. Tinker, once an NBC executive, now regards it as the network least likely to air an MTM show.

"Whereas: Mary Tyler Moore turns the world on with her smile . . . The Mary Tyler Moore Show has created more interest in Minnesota than have our 15,000 lakes, and Mary Tyler Moore's television 'home' on Kenwood Parkway in Minneapolis is now a feature on guided tours, along with the Guthrie Theatre, the Mississippi River and the State Capitol; and Mary Tyler Moore's characterization of a Minnesota career girl with intelligence, beauty, charm and good taste has earned the approval and envy of career girls everywhere . . ."

Influence

Mary Tyler Moore chain smokes. Mary Richards, on TV, doesn't. "I would never smoke in public," says Moore. She means her public of tens of millions of people each week. "I'm aware of the influence I have on people."

Her smoking may soon stop. She plans to quit for Tinker's 50th birthday in January. Recently she has meditated daily, though not just because of her smoking. But she expects it to help. "I feel a very subtle calmness settling in," she says. "Eventually it (Meditation) will affect anything that's bad for you."

If you watch Moore smoke or meditate or skip her daily dance class to eat hot dogs at the first California branch of Nathan's (the New York-based chain), you remember she was born in Brooklyn and you're tempted to conclude that Mary Richards is just a role for a capable actress. Wrong.

"Mary Tyler Moore and Mary Richards are both red-blooded, upbeat types," says Tinker. "Mary's essentially playing herself." Does Mary Tyler Moore like Mary Richards? "I better," says the former. "She's a lot like Mary Tinker."

Mary Tyler Moore Richards Tinker was once Laura Petrie to Dick Van Dyke's Rob. One of her specialties then was crying. Her sobs were a classic comic turn, proving she could get laughs on her own. She knows she cried well and she confesess "It's great fun for me. Performers often like to remain dignified when they cry. I like to just let it all out like kids do."

Mary Richards seldom cries. Some have said life is too sunny for her. Moore disagrees: "Mary has a lot of troubles, problems, conflicts. The writers seldom give us a show that ties everything up from A to Z. But Mary has a very strong chin which precedes her through all her experiences."

Notes Brooks: "It's incredible to think this seemed radical six years ago — to have a women who wasn't married, never had been, who alluded to an affair." Moore claims her show was "the first that dealt with this situation." Marlo Thomas's That Girl featured "a constant quest for a man to validate her experience," says Moore. "We said, 'Hey, it feels good to be single. Loneliness is a valid experience, part of life. One shouldn't desperately rush toward marriage'."

Some carpers wish Mary Richards had a more visible sex life. "Maybe we'll get all the smut the family hour takes off Phyllis and Rhoda," jokes Moore as if in anticipation. More hanky-panky might be shown "if it's done interestingly, but never for shock value," she decrees. Her show has been "eye-opening, but never in the hit 'em between the eyes sense."

If Mary Richards doesn't cry as much as Laura Petrie, she also doesn't get as many conspicuous laughs. She has her own crew of second bananas. But "we're using her to get more and more laughs," says Brooks. "The spinoffs (Phillis and Rhoda) helped us in a perverse way. It forced us to be fresh, and Mary filled some of the holes."

Moore says "To me the laugh isn't so important. It's the feeling of the scene. I consider myself an actress who occasionally gets laughs rather than a comedienne." All MTM comedies are filmed before live audiences and the laughter is authentic, though it may be edited or even reduced if it drowns out lines.)

She also considers herself an actress rather than a tycoon. "I get fuming mad at headlines that call me 'America's newest tycoon'," she says, not fuming at all. She has a title at the top of the MTM corporate structure, "but absolutely no role" as an executive. She owns part of the company (and MTM officials decline to comment on MTM's worth), but her salary as a tycoon is only $30 a week. It was cut from $60 after she "rabbitholed" some of her checks, she says, saving them to buy Tinker a present. When the accountants couldn't account for the cheques, Tinker cracked down.

Like Tinker, she believes her authority, maintaining that while she may offer "suggestions" to Tinker, "it's only as a husband and wife would discuss anything that's important in their lives." Creativity, she says, "I'm surrounded by supremely talented people. I've never had to sit down and get a whip out and tell them 'we've got to do it this way.' They've overwhelmed me."

A look at the rehearsals and filming of Ted and Georgette's wedding corroborated her claim that "everything is done by committee." And the repartee between takes was often as much in character as the script.

Hustling on 4 at 9. No rating available on this 1975 made-for-TV drama that looks at prostitution — from street corners and bars to police vans and jail cells — through the eyes of a female investigative reporter.
